—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

THE LONG drought puzzles meteorologists.

"Prolonged air stagnation" and a shrinkage in the Polar ice cap are mentioned as possible causes by Mr. Marvin, head of the United States Weather Bureau.

SOONER OR LATER men will know how to make rain fall when they choose, as they know, now, how to make water freeze and how to harness lightning, using the lightning current to freeze water.

This writer is by profession no rainmaker or witch doctor, but ventures to repeat here a suggestion made in writing to the government years ago.

No drop of rain falls without a speck of microscopic dust at the center of the drop, the dust making condensation of vapor and precipitation possible.

Lack of atmospheric dust might account for a diminished rainfall, since dust must be present in every raindrop.

WHY NOT send up dust, scattering it from airplanes, in the regular mail and passenger carrying errands. The propeller or exhaust, or a special apparatus would scatter it.

Some material of a highly hydrophilous nature, attracting water, lime rock, or that much-used new substance scattered on roads to collect atmospheric moisture, might answer the purpose, ground to finest powder.

SOME PROCESS for making the dust very cold, liquid air, perhaps, might be useful, since water coming in contact with a cold surface condenses readily.

You have seen steam form solid drops on your cold hand.

WHEN THIS was suggested to government experts, by the writer, long ago, it was said that no results worth while could be obtained, for nature operates in too vast a space.

But, why not try it?

It is known that heavy rains have fallen after great battles. That may have been accident, or it may have been due to powder dust from cannon and rifles, scattered in the air, and taken up by air currents.

If a copper wire can bring down lightning, dust, of the right kind, scattered at very low temperature, might bring down rain.

CAREFUL INVESTIGATION shows that, because of unemployment, the wages earned by American workers in 1930 were nine thousand million dollars below the earnings of 1929.

Nine billions are a great many dollars, several times the value of the country's wheat and automobile output combined.

THE AMERICAN Federation of Labor figures the 1930 drop even higher, at ten billions.

THAT DROP in wages, which means a drop in spending power and consequently in prosperity, is what ails us, and those that advise a cut in wages should remember it. Wages are already being cut, only too widely and energetically, although without public announcement as a rule.

Cut earnings lower, by reductions publicly sanctioned, and you will have real trouble.

THE GOVERNMENT sues Bethlehem Steel for eleven millions in excessive profits on war contracts. Experts testify for Bethlehem that it made only 21 per cent profit against 50 per cent profit made by United States Steel.

The gentle farmer will wonder why the price of his wheat was held down by law to $2.50 per bushel in war, while local corporations could gather in tens of millions.

THE SIMPLE answer is that local corporations, well organized, are run by a few men that snuggle close up to the government. Farming is done by millions of scattered men, not well organized, that snuggle up to nobody, except once in four years to one or other political party that soon forgets them.

YAQUI INDIANS, in their villages, celebrate Easter in a way that whiter Christians criticize as barbarous.

The whites contrast the rock sepulcher in each village, representing the tomb of Christ, three little girls in white, representing angels, with the nearly naked Indian braves, their bodies streaked with paint, faces hideously masked, dancing and chanting before the altar candles.

THOSE WHITES should know that a mixture in religions is the rule.

Each new religion, in its turn, perpetuates the beliefs and customs of religions preceding it. Scores of religions before Christianity had their trinities, miraculous births, resurrections. Christianity today borrows costumes, insignia and titles from pagan religions and governments of long ago.

City Opens 'Short Weight' War

BIG POTATO SHIPMENT HELD UP

Inspector Orders Cargo Kept in Yards Here on Under-Weight Complaint

More than six car loads of potatoes, in 15-pound sacks, were held up in the produce yards of the Pennsylvania railroad today by James P. Bailey, chief inspector of the city's Bureau of Weights and Measures, who charged that "every other sack was under weight."

After examining scores of the sacks, Bailey declared half of them did not contain the 15 pounds represented by signs on them and warned that he would prosecute anybody who removed any of the sacks unless the weight requirements were fulfilled.

ACTS ON COMPLAINTS

Bailey said he was acting on complaints received not only from the Retail Merchants' Association, but from housewives and grocers.

The potatoes were consigned to a dozen wholesale merchants, several of whom talked of obtaining an injunction against Bailey, but refused to allow their names to be used publicly in such a movement.

STATE LAW

In condemning the consignment, Bailey said he was acting under a state law.

The merchants explained that they had bought the potatoes on 15-pound basis and that possibly the potatoes had "dried out" during shipment. Each bag was marked "Fifteen pounds when packed."

FALL JAIL TERM CONFIRMED

WASHINGTON, April 6.—(AP.)—A sentence of one year in jail and $100,000 fine against Albert B. Fall, former interior secretary under President Harding, was affirmed today by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

At the same time the court upheld the decision of a lower court, under which Harry M. Blackmer was fined $60,000 for contempt of court in refusing to return from France to appear as a witness in the oil trials of Harry F. Sinclair and Fall.

Plunge Kills Worker On Tallest Building

NEW YORK, April 6.—(AP.)—From an upper floor of the Empire State, the world's tallest building, an unidentified man fell to his death today. The body, believed to be that of a laborer, landed on the twenty-first floor extension.

'GIN SLAYER' WINS NEW TRIAL

Evidence of Kirkland Guilt On Basis of Blow by Fist Insufficient, Judge Holds

VALPARAISO, Ind., April 6.—(AP.)—Virgil Kirkland was granted a new trial today for the murder of his Gary schoolgirl sweetheart, Arlene Draves, at a Gary (Ind.) "gin party."

Judge Grant Crumpacker, in Porter County Circuit Court, ruled that evidence on the first count in the indictment, that of murder by striking the 18-year-old girl with his fist, was insufficient for conviction. The new trial was set for April 29.

EVIDENCE STUDIED

Judge Crumpacker's decision was rendered after studying the evidence for several weeks. Kirkland's punishment had been fixed by the jury at life imprisonment.

The court said there would "have been no question about it" if the jury had voted for conviction on the count charging murder while committing an attack.

PREMEDITATION LACKING

The judge said Kirkland had struck the girl with his fist and that the blow on her head was the prime cause of death. He added:

"If the defendant did not intend to kill the girl, no matter how reckless his conduct was, he could not be convicted under count one of the affidavit.

"Kirkland was as surprised as anyone else at the girl's death. No motive has been assigned as to why the defendant should want to put her to death. There is no positive evidence that he had any thought of so doing."

SYMPATHY FOR FAMILY

Judge Crumpacker expressed sympathy for the family of the Gary girl who died after the drinking party last November 29. He said a higher court would surely have reversed the jury's decision had he refused Kirkland a new trial and instead granted him an appeal. He continued:

"I received more mail regarding this case than any other in my experience on the bench. Ninety per cent of it was from Chicago and most of it from women."

FOUR OTHERS AWAIT TRIAL

Kirkland, a 20-year-old Gary mill worker, was convicted March 10 after a trial lasting 12 days before a male jury. He was not sentenced pending decision on his petition for a new trial.

Chief Deputy Prosecutor John Underwood, Jr., characterized the decision today as an "outrage." He announced to the court the state would consider dismissing the first two counts of the indictment charging murder by a blow of the fist and with a blunt instrument, and trying Kirkland on the last two counts, charging murder in perpetration of an attack and while attempting perpetration of an attack.

DRIVE FOR JOB FUND BEGINS

The Allegheny County Emergency Association opened its drive to obtain $3,000,000 for stabilization of employment this morning, with 1,000 men and women volunteer workers starting a two weeks' canvass of corporations and their employes and individuals.

The operating committee issued a statement last night showing that the public has to date contributed $763,384.93, of which $671,726.94 has been paid in cash, leaving subscriptions of $91,657.99 to be paid at specified later dates.

Of the total subscribed to date, there has been appropriated $730,946.96, of which $265,253.96 was for direct relief and $465,693 for employment, according to the statement. It declared that in spite of the number of men given employment, the relief demands are still greater than the regular social agencies can meet.

As the association's funds increase, larger numbers of men are

Eighty per cent of prisoners held in jail during the summer court vacation obtain their freedom when court reopens, it became known today through investigation. The total of these individuals against whom charges are dropped, indictments are refused or who are acquitted includes 150 to 175 of the 200 to 300 prisoners held in jail during July and August, it was said by Chaplain S. C. Michaelfelder, of the county jail, and others. The chaplain is among those who have come out for summer court sessions.

The difficult has been that a person arrested after court has adjourned for vacations had to stay in jail until court reopened in the fall, unless he was able to obtain bail.

HARD ON PRISONERS

He further remarked:

"Some prisoners actually plead guilty on plea day, held one day a week, in order to obtain their freedom. When it is their first offense, they are usually paroled.

"To keep the court open may be hard on the courts, but it is also hard on the prisoners to stay in jail. If trials could be speeded up, it would not only save the county money, but save men.

"Men concoct all sorts of schemes, aided by questionable lawyers, to appear in court each

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—(AP.)—Amelia Earhart has purchased an autogiro and will make an altitude test flight here tomorrow.

The trans-Atlantic flier said the test would give her an opportunity to do "some real aeronautical pioneering of scientific and economic importance." She has flown one of the "windmills" on two different occasions for a total of about two hours.

Firing At Capone From Sea Unsafe; He May Have Navy

He had better be careful. How does he know that Al hasn't got a navy too?

The cities seem finally aroused against the racketeers. Chicago gave one 14 years for a murder that was cold enough to nickel-plate an iceberg.

Fourteen years for murder. You can get that in Jacksonville for parking near a fire plug.

LOWEST BIDDER SUES COUNTY

The courts today were asked to restrain the County Commissioners from giving to other than the lowest bidder the contract for lockers for the North and South Park golf courses.

Counsel for the Northwestern Steel Products Company, of Illinois, filed a bill in equity before Judge Sylvester Snee, contending that its bid was $110 lower than that of the Lyons Metal Products Company, of Pittsburgh, which was awarded the contract last week. The Northwestern bid was $2,282.50, the Lyons bid was $2,392.50.

Judge Snee granted a preliminary injunction and set Friday for a hearing.

County Commissioners awarded the contract last week to the Lyons Company on motion of C. C. McGovern to "give the contract to the lowest bidder meeting the specifications."

The Lyons Company representative pointed out that his product was provided with tubular reinforced doors, as called for in the specifications, whereas the lower bidder's article had no reinforcing feature.

The Northwestern Company's explanation was that its door was of heavier steel and did not require reinforcing.

Campbell Battles Death In Wild Racing Auto

BROOKLANDS, Eng., April 6.—(AP.)—Sir Malcolm Campbell, world motorcar speed king, looked death in the eye for a few seconds today while an almost unmanageable racing car carried him along the steeply banked track at Brooklands at 100 miles an hour.

Competing in a handicap event at the opening day of racing on the Brooklands Auto Racing Club program, Sir Malcolm was just completing the first lap of a 12-mile race when the rod holding the front wheels in position broke.

As the spectators lining both sides of the track gasped in horror, Sir Malcolm fought the careening car along the steeply banked track as the other competitors roared past, and brought it to a halt without mishap. If the car had gone off the track it probably would have meant death both to himself and many spectators.

Campbell said it was one of the closest calls he'd ever had, adding:

"It was a ghastly experience. I suppose my luck holds good."

Sir Malcolm was asked when he came to the United States last January to attempt to set a new world's automobile speed record, if he never feared that death might overtake him in one of his mad dashes along a track or the sands of Daytona Beach. He said then:

"I've seen 'it' in front of me so many times, I'm a fatalist. You never go before your time. If my time is up I'm ready to go. There's no use grousing."

CONTROLLER FIGURES CAUSE CLASH

Councilman Again Assails Ex-Official Prosecuting Charges of City Waste

City Council's investigation of charges of inefficiency in the Public Works Department was enlivened by the passing of the lie again today in a tilt between Councilman W. Y. English and Henry Oliver Evans, the department's accuser. The tilt occurred as Council obtained an explanation of the purchase of new and re-used lumber on city contracts.

Answering Councilman Robert Garland's assertion that Council had difficulty in obtaining a debt statement from the last City Controller Daniel Winters, made during a heated session last week, Councilman English declared that Winters, in a "sick and dying condition," had furnished Council with a debt statement on March 30, 1930. Winters died in May. English said:

"I was accused the other day of a dirty, malicious, political lie. It was said that I shook my finger at the public and declared I was always right. I want to point out that I was right in this case."

'THAT'S A LIE'

English renewed his charge that Evans, while he was city controller, had failed to co-operate with City Council. Evans shouted.

"That's a lie."

English retorted:

"No, it's not a lie."

He was interrupted by President John S. Herron, back at his post after a week's illness with:

"Gentlemen. We must be dispassionate about this. We must carry this on in an orderly manner."

English, Garland and Evans tried to talk at once, English getting the attention of the chair:

"If you had attended to this business while you were controller, I repeat we woul not have this hearing now and Council would not be put to all this trouble."

RASKOB ASKS DEMOCRATIC LEADERS' VIEWS ON PROHIBITION

ADMITS RIFT IN PARTY ON DRY LAW

Seeks Peace Program for Convention in Message To National Committeemen

By THOMAS WRIGLEY
United Service

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Every member of the Democratic National Committee was being urged today by Chairman John J. Raskob to send in his individual recommendations on prohibition.

Admitting a bitter prohibition controversy within the Democratic ranks, Raskob asked for the "low-down" in a letter mailed last night to each member.

All recommendations received before September 1 are to be tabulated and sent to committee members to be considered at the next meeting of the committee in December.

SEEKS TO END ROW

In this way, Raskob made plain, the Democratic committee will seek to settle the prohibition row and formulate a program to be laid before the 1932 presidential convention. That row already has split the Democratic South from the Democratic anti-prohibition forces of the North.

Raskob did not mince matters in his letter, his first follow-up move since the committee meeting here on March 9, at which he outlined his much flayed "home rule" plan. Asking members to send their reactions on the prohibition issue to Jouett Shouse, executive committee chairman, Raskob said:

"I mention prohibition particularly because this question has received more comment than any other touched on in my address and, whether we like it or not, prohibition is a critical question in many of our states.

SEEKS NO COMPULSION

"I want no state to have liquor forced upon it, and I want no state to have sumptuary laws forced upon it against its will.

"Let me beg those members who come from what are roughly grouped as the dry states to realize that perhaps the most outstanding problem facing your chairman and this committee is to attempt to reconcile the dry attitude of the party in the South with the liberal attitude of the party in the North. If these opposing positions cannot be reconciled we must squarely face the fact that our party is really divided into two parties."

Coast Democrats Oppose Young Candidacy Plan

LOS ANGELES, April 6.—(Universal.)—Democrats of Southern California are discussing with grave concern the visit of Jouett Shouse, executive director of the National Democratic Committee, scheduled for April 13, for a three-day conference with Democratic leaders of 11 western states.

Judging from John J. Raskob's course at the recent Washington meeting of the national committee, and the efforts being made to promote Owen D. Young as the party's candidate for President, the western Democrats are discussing among themselves the necessity of being on guard against careless commitments to Shouse, whom they recognize as Raskob's man.

Western Democrats in the main do not regard Young, chairman of the board of General Electric, closely allied to the power trust and the Morgan interests, as an available candidate.

NEW DRIVES ON IN DRY WAR

WASHINGTON, April 6.—(AP.)—Two of the major wet organizations today launched fresh attacks against the dry law, while one of the leading dry groups assailed anti-prohibitionists and another rallied to the defense of the dry law.

The Methodist Episcopal Board of Temperance openly hit out at the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, charging that "it systematically incites the poorly informed to resentment" against the government.

The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment countered with a statement on Norway's "noble experiment," contending that the failure of prohibition there presented a situation similar in many respects to that in the United States.

From the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform came an announcement of a two-day "demonstration" against the dry law in Washington, April 14 and 15.

THE CALL OF THE WILD :-: By Quin Hall

Thursday, plea day, and gain their liberty."

Chaplain Michaelfelder says that to hold Criminal Court but one day a week in July and August is not enough. Men who are sent to jail and have no money or friends, he emphasized, are out of luck.

He also said:

"Holding men in jail causes more grief in attempting to make adjustments for the benefit of families and for the individual waiting in jail in summer time, than anything I know. It is about the worst jail problem we have."

REMEDIES FAVORED

Some of the judges, it was learned, have been giving consideration to the agitation the past year to keep the courts open in summer and the criminal branch is likely to be more active. Criminal Court has been open only one day a week in July and August and the assignment room of Common Pleas Court three days a week. There is not likely to be any change in the Common Pleas branch, but some judges favor remedies in the Criminal Court.

Judges spoken to on the subject said that in the Common Pleas Court business is being speeded up, as eight judges are to be assigned to hear cases, whereas a year ago, only five sat during jury trials. Some judges also claim that most of the personal injury cases, which constitute three-fourths of the cases tried are heard but by few law firms, and these do not want court held in July and August.

Various arguments have been advanced against holding summer sessions. One is that 6 to 9 months should elapse from the time a person is injured until the case is tried in order to assure justice to the defendant on the theory that fresh scars or bandages prompt excessive awards.

TRIALS OCCUPY 31 WEEKS

The Common Pleas branch jury trials occupy 31 weeks, with arguments and motions for new trials, together with the summer months' vacation, occupying the rest of the year. Following arguments, each judge has 14 to 20 opinions to write, the last argument list being held in June, before the summer vacation. Some judges say they are unable to leave their desks until August.

To stagger vacations of the jurists, some judges say, would not relieve the pressure. To hold court in summer would disarrange vacation schedules of persons brought into court as witnesses, jurors and attaches, and interfere with schedules where such persons are employed, proponents of the long court vacation say.

Weather Conditions.

A disturbance is centered on the South Atlantic Coast, apparently moving slowly northward. It is causing rain over North Carolina and Virginia east of the mountains and snow in the mountains as far south as Southern Pennsylvania. At Wytheville, Va., five inches of snow covers the ground. Another disturbance appears in the Far Northwest and pressure is also low in the Southwest. These low pressure areas are separated by a wedge of high pressure extending from Eastern Ontario southwestward over the Mississippi Valley states to Texas. It is attended by clear, quiet weather and moderately cold weather. Light frost is reported in the Mississippi Valley states as far south as Northern Louisiana. Over the plains states the temperatures are rising.

UTILITIES BILLS UP THIS WEEK

HARRISBURG, April 6.—(AP.)—Members of the General Assembly planned to devote most of their time this week to consideration of Public Service Commission and utility legislation, when the Legislature reconvenes on Tuesday noon with the usual Monday night session canceled because of the Easter holiday.

Senate members of the committee on judiciary general planned to work on the drafting of additional legislation based on the testimony placed in the records in seven weeks of investigation. The House committee investigating public utilities will resume sessions Wednesday.

Both administration's fair rate board bill and the Harvey municipal water ownership measure are expected to be reported out of committee in the House this week. Last week the fair rate board measure was amended in committee to remove the provision for election of members of the board.

Stokowski Making Sound Films of Two Ballets

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—(INS.)—Leopold Stokowski, director of the famous Philadelphia Orchestra, turned movie director today as he set about the task of making sound pictures of two modernistic ballets.

The Metropolitan Opera House here was being rigged up this morning as an impromptu movie studio for the work. The operas, Igor Strawinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and Serge Prokofieff's "Pas d'Acier," will be made into separate films, 40 minutes in length.

The two works will be produced for the general public here on Monday afternoon, April 13. The sound films will be exhibited in the Metropolitan Opera House of New York, on April 21, Stokowski announced.

PINCHOT'S AIDE RAPS UTILITIES AND DRY FOES

McSparran, Speaking Here, Also Scores Attempt to Change State Blue Law

A representative of Gov. Pinchot today, before the Pittsburgh Ministerial Union in the Smithfield Street Methodist Episcopal Church, reiterated the Pinchot administration's opposition to the utilities, pleaded for enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and defended the blue law.

John A. McSparran, secretary of agriculture, who substituted for Gov. Pinchot as the speaker, contended that the demand for repeal of the blue law is a demand to turn the Sabbath day from a holy day to a holiday and argued that such a procedure could only "call down upon us the wrath of God."

BACKS DRY LAW

As to the liquor laws, he said:

"The enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment lies fundamentally in the nation and state welfare . . . The poison of alcohol prevents the necessary clear brain and steady nerves that the life of today needs to have and therefore instead of modification, nullification or repeal we must arrive at complete enforcement."

SCORES UTILITIES

On public utilities, McSparran said:

"If the utilities are going to continue to go into our elections and use money in the corruption of our politics in order that they may continue to assess the people without restriction, then the democracy of which we profess to be proud, is virtually destroyed . . . The purpose of the Public Service Commission is not to hear complaints but to protect the interests of the public."

McSparran described the Pinchot road program as the most practical piece of farm relief "that has been offered anywhere." He was introduced by the Rev. Dr. J. Sale Leland.

ADDRESSES CLUB

This afternoon McSparran expressed similar opinions before the Hungry Club, in the Fort Pitt Hotel.

At the church meeting, the Rev. Dr. W. W. T. Duncan was elected president of the union; the Rev. R. S. Galbreath, vice-president, and the Rev. W. L. Ritter, secretary and treasurer.

Members of the executive committee elected include the Rev. H. L. Krause, the Rev. W. W. Woodfin, the Rev. J. W. Hawley, the Rev. J. B. Magee, the Rev. N. C. Milliron, and the Rev. Edward Bleakney.

A resolution protesting the enactment of the bill which would abolish the blue law, was adopted. Passage of the bill, according to the motion, would cause Sunday to be commercialized. The bill itself, according to the motion, is an "entering wedge for commercialization."

'Billy' Sunday Starts Anti-Saloon Crusade

WASHINGTON, April 6.—(INS.)—Billy Sunday, the evangelist, today delivered one of his characteristic sermons against the saloon at the First Congregational Church, where Calvin Coolidge worshipped when president.

He is one of a group chosen by the Anti-Saloon League to lecture on its extensive campaign for continued prohibition. Today's engagement opened his program, which will close in Minneapolis April 23.

U. S. SURGEON AND NICARAGUA CHIEF CLASH

Naval Officer Relieved After Tilt With President Over Killing of Marine

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, April 6.—(AP.)—A searching inquiry was under way today into events of Saturday night which culminated in the shooting of a Marine Corps sergeant and a subsequent dramatic contact between a naval surgeon and the president of Nicaragua.

The Marine Corps sergeant, W. H. Pigg, who also was a second lieutenant in the Nicaraguan National Guard, is understood to have become slightly demented as a consequence of the severe strain to which everyone here has been subjected since last Tuesday's quake.

RUSHES TO SCENE

In the course of a reprimand to members of the Guardia National he was shot and killed, and was taken to a house nearby where President Moncado and members of his staff had established their residence. Intense excitement prevailed and feeling outside ran high.

Lieut. Commander William Hetfield, who at nearby Campo de Marte, has been in charge of the herculean surgical task which followed the earthquake, heard of the shooting, and understanding that a Marine was wounded, rushed to the house.

CLASHES WITH OFFICIALS

He was stopped at the door by two Nicaraguan officials, but forced his way in. President Moncado appeared and, in the excitement of the moment, reminded the American naval officer that he was president of Nicaragua, a reminder to which Hetfield made what was understood to be an undiplomatic answer.

Lieutenant Commander Hetfield left for Corino, seaport on the Pacific Coast, by a special United States Marine Corps airplane at noon Sunday, leaving the surgical work, which he has directed, in the hands of others. No official statement has been made by Col. F. L. Bradman, commanding marines, other than that an inquiry to develop the facts in Pigg's death was under way.

Managua spent a sad Easter. All churches were destroyed in the quake which leveled the city and took 2,000 lives last Tuesday, but masses were said at several improvised chapels. Martial law of the strictest type prevailed and to most of the 15,000 inhabitants remaining in and about Managua the day was merely another in the endless quest for food.

Citizens Check Fire Threatening Town

CARSON CITY, Nev., April 6.—(AP.)—Virtually every able-bodied man in Carson City joined in battling flames which destroyed the Grand Opera House and for a time threatened to sweep the business section.

A residence also was razed, and several other buildings were damaged. The fire was believed to have started in an oil furnace in the opera house.

DRIVE FOR JOB FUND BEGINS

CHANCE FOR MORE JOBS

Public works already planned in the city and suburban areas would provide immediate employment for several thousand additional persons if sufficient funds were available to pay labor costs, officials of the association declared. Under the plan the municipalities furnish the materials and the association pays the wages.

The operating committee's records show that 2,573 persons have been given work. Total expenses of the association for the two months it has been operating are $6,468.22, including the salaries of the clerical force, which was taken from the list of unemployed.

The fund workers, divided into two sections, are striving toward a goal of $2,000,000 from corporations and their employes, and $1,000,000 from individuals. Division "B," covering the first group, is composed of 300 members of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce. The workers covering the latter group are known as Division "A."

DIVISIONS TO MEET

Members of the two divisions were to meet today at luncheon in the Chamber of Commerce, to make reports. Similar report luncheons will be held every day during the drive. Edgar J. Kaufmann, one of the originators of the Pittsburgh Plan and a member of both the executive and operating committees, was to be the principal speaker at today's luncheon.

WALKER BACK FOR 'FIGHT OF LIFE'

'Jimmy' Foregoes Wisecracks On Return to Office; Will Draft Reply to Charges

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service.

NEW YORK, April 6.—Mayor James J. Walker today plunged into the "battle of his career" against his critics who accuse him of misfeasance in office and demand his removal as head of the government of New York City.

He wasn't the nonchalant, wisecracking "Jimmy" that New York knows so well but a grim, almost scowling warrior, who indicated that this is to be "a fight to a finish." He said:

"They asked for this fight; we'll give them all we've got."

GENIALITY GONE

His sun blistered face set in grim lines, the Mayor reported for work at City Hall today after his 26-day vacation in California. He promptly announced that he will begin at once to make his reply to the charges of misfeasance laid before the Governor by the city affairs committee.

He walked with buoyant step through a lane of 700 persons assembled in City Hall plaza—most of them jobless men—and went without delay to his flower-bedecked office.

The dapper "Jimmy" refused to discuss reports that he contemplated an immediate shakeup of one or two departments of his administration. It is understood, however, that he does not. It was said he plans to curtail his social engagements in compliance with instructions from his physicians.

DIRECTS OWN DEFENSE

Mayor Walker was asked if he intended to employ legal counsel in preparing his defense to the charges leveled at him by the Rev. John Haynes Holmes and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of the city affairs committee. His answer was this:

"I'll prepare the reply myself. I will start on it today. The answer, however, will be done systematically and carefully."

He discussed freely two setter pups he brought back from California. It seems they acted as alarm clocks this morning by pulling the sheets from his honor's bed. Even at that, the Mayor was late for work. He was "due" at 10 a. m., and didn't arrive until 10:28 a. m. But this was considerably ahead of his normal schedule.

Chicago Candidate's Residence Bombed

CHICAGO, April 6.—(INS.)—Chicago police today recorded another bomb explosion, this time in an apartment building which houses the family of Joseph Sikorski, candidate in tomorrow's run-off election for alderman of the Eleventh Ward.

Fire Causes Panic In Church, 1 Dead

MEXICO CITY, April 6.—(AP.)—Dispatches to the newspaper La Prensa from Iguala said one person was trampled to death at a pre-Easter service in a church there when the building caught fire. The fire was caused by a short circuit in the electric wiring. The congregation stampeded.

14 Asking Alms Given Jail Terms

Fourteen men, arrested in the downtown district yesterday, police say, for soliciting alms near church entrances, were given 30-day jail sentences today by Magistrate Leo Rothenberg in Central Police Court.

Darrow Glad New Yorkers Ignore Dry Law

NEW YORK, April 6.—(INS.)—Clarence Darrow is glad to observe that New Yorkers today do not observe the prohibition laws, he said in a speech to the First Humanist Society here. He said:

"Before we can solve the problem of crime we must know the difference between right and wrong. What I say is right will be wrong to another person. It is very puzzling. For example, in many cases it is right to kill.

You can kill in defense of your home unless it is invaded by a prohibition agent, and then you get killed."

The famous criminal lawyer added that when he was a child he was told that anybody could be President of the United States and that for the last three terms he has "been of the opinion that perhaps that is true."

Hoovers Cheer Children At Annual Egg Roll

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Despite a drizzling rain, children to the number of 12,796 (police count) trekked through the gates of the White House today and plastered the usually immaculate grounds with brightly-colored Eastern eggs.

Parents wearful of colds and earaches hustled some of the youngster away as soon as the eggs had been dispatched, but throughout the morning the grounds were jammed nevertheless.

The first casualty was chalked up shortly before noon when 10-year-old Samuel Jackson, of Muskegon, Mich., fell and broke his arm. Police sent him to Emergency Hospital.

Massed in the East Room, about 200 children of government officials crowded to the windows overlooking the broad south grounds. They had been invited by Mrs. Hoover to join her three grandchildren, Peggy Ann, Herbert Hoover III, and Joan.

Twice during the morning Mrs. Hoover and the two elder grandchildren gave a personal greeting to the egg rollers. The First Lady stood on the south portico, waving and smiling, while Peggy Ann and Herbert III contemplated the scene soberly, then smiled and waved. At their second appearance, Mrs. Hoover bowed in return to shouts of greeting and said, looking up:

"Oh, look at this old rain. We had hoped there would be lots of sunshine."

Calling "Welcome," and "Glad to see you," Mrs. Hoover pointed out Girl Scouts and other groups on the lawn to the children. She wore a deep plum gown with a wrap thrown over her shoulders.

5,000 Attend Flagstaff Hill Services

"He is risen, indeed."

They responded to the voice of Dr. Hugh Thomson Kerr, pastor of the Shadyside Presbyterian Church, and moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America, who delivered the Easter message to a throng assembled from all parts of the county.

CHORUS OF 250

They ascended the hillside, like ghostly figures in the frosty dawn, 45 minutes earlier from automobiles which congested the parkways, as a fanfare of trumpets ushered in the service at 7 o'clock.

A combined chorus of 250 voices sang "Resurrection," followed by "Holy, Holy, Holy," by the audience. After a reading of scripture and prayer by William C. McClintock, director of Pennsylvania State Christian Endeavor Union, which sponsored the service, "Palm Branches" was sung by the chorus, and Dr. Kerr delivered his message. He said:

"Easter is a festival of power; the power of God, made evident in the Resurrection. Each of you has preached a sermon in your heart by your presence here. Easter is essentially a sunrise celebration as Christmas is one by night."

William S. Wise, President of the Allegheny County Christian Endeavor Union, presided at the service, and the chorus was directed by Clyde L. Wolford, aided by Homer Ochsenhirt, director of the Lutheran Choir of Pittsburgh. Reuel B. Wolford, vice president of the Pennsylvania State Christian Endeavor Union, was song leader. The trumpeters, from Taylor Allderdice High School, were Alfred Hamilton, Gray Weller, Robert Goehring and Joseph Nirella. Miss Arline Fehsenfeld was chairman of the music committee.

The committee in charge was composed of H. Gray Hamilton, Samuel R. Weatherford, Harry B. Scott, William Finley Speer, Clyde L. Wolford, Miss Fehsenfeld, Dr. J. W. Claudy, Dr. J. Kirkwood Craig, William G. Shontz, Charles E. Wegner, Miss Stella Walker, Stanley Fincke, Miss Elizabeth Snapp and George L. Townsend.

Co-operating organizations in the service were: Pittsburgh Council of Churches, Allegheny County Sabbath School Association, Epworth League Conferences, Baptist Young Peoples' Union, Young Women's Christian Association, Young Men's Christian Association and Allegheny County Christian Endeavor Union.

CONVICTS DENY FIRE GUILT

COLUMBUS, O., April 6.—(INS.)—Pleas of not guilty were entered here today by Clinton (Cotton) Grate, of Dayton, O., and Hugh Gibson, alias Gibbons, of Philadelphia, charged with first-degree murder in connection with the Easter Monday penitentiary fire here a year ago in which 320 prisoners lost their lives.

On the first anniversary of the fire which they are said to have confessed setting because they did not wish to see an additional cell block erected at the penitentiary, the two convicts appeared in Franklin County Common Pleas Court before Judge Cecil J. Randall and technically denied their guilt.

Although they previously indicated a willingness to plead guilty and "get it over," according to Prosecutor Donald J. Hoskins, on advice of counsel today they decided to abandon such at plea, at least until they are actually charged with murder at the beginning of their trial.

KING'S ILLNESS HELD SLIGHT

LONDON, April 6.—(AP.)—Inconvenienced by a slight cold, King George is remaining in the royal apartments at Windsor for the present in order to minimize likelihood of complications during one of the nastiest Easter seasons England has known in years.

Indicative of the lightness with which the monarch's illness is regarded, his physicians decided not to issue a bulletin regarding his condition.

2 Missing as Blast Wrecks Light Plant

CANTON, Miss., April 6.—(AP.)—Two men were missing and six others were injured when a boiler exploded at the municipal light plant here last night.

The plant was wrecked and the city was in darkness. The two missing were believed to be an employe and an unidentified member of an itinerant group of brickmasons.

Bus Boy's $5,600 Lottery Prize Shrinks to $52

"Horses."

That's what Paul Zamiska, 21-year-old William Penn Hotel bus boy, said today when he was told that his ticket on the Canadian Army and Navy Veterans' charity sweep on the Grand National had won for him only $52.73 instead of the $5,600 he was expecting.

Paul had a $1 ticket on "South Hill," among the 40 unplaced starters. On March 27, he was told that he would receive $5,600.

The amount of his winnings was cut down because of a shrinkage in the sale of "shares." Estimates of wininngs were based on an expected sale of $200,000, whereas, according to the statement prepared after the race, there was only $42,186 to divide among the winners.

And then Paul and his friends had evidently misinterpreted the telegram he received announcing him as one of the winners. It was explained to him today he could not possibly have won $5,600, even though the awards had been based on a $200,000 distribution.

Today Paul said:

"Well, I said then I would keep my job, and I'm glad I did. I was going to buy an automobile, but now I'll just get a new suit. After all, what can you expect for $1?"

War Anniversary Brings Warning From Coolidge

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., April 6.

To the Editor of The Sun-Telegraph:

To those who recall how important the United States Army appeared on the sixth of April, nineteen hundred and seventeen, this anniversary will seem a fitting time for the nation to give some thought to its military establishment.

Mr. Coolidge

Human nature takes things for granted that have long existed. We forget that the constant effort and care of someone makes them so. In spite of all our other precautions, the peace we enjoy still has in it a large element of preparation for national defense. No self-respecting people desiring to live under a reign of law at home and abroad can afford to neglect their army.

Public security depends to a large extent on the knowledge that the government has power to enforce its decrees.

Our own Army is not merely an instrument of war. It serves in peace. The engineering corps built the Panama Canal and supervises Mississippi flood control, and river and harbor improvement. The medical corps overcame the scourge of yellow fever. For many years the War Department administered our insular possessions. The people can look on the past and present of their Army, its distinguished soldiers and its great accomplishments with satisfaction and confidence. We have an Army that is not militaristic.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

U. S. Entered World War 14 Years Ago Today

By DAVID P. SENTNER
International News Service.

NEW YORK, April 6.—Fourteen years ago today the United States entered the World War. The signing of the war proclamation against Germany at 1:11 p. m. by President Woodrow Wilson was received quietly in American city and hamlet.

Ninety German merchant ships were immediately interned. The Stars and Stripes blossomed forth from millions of windows and mastheads. A man refused to stand when the national anthem was played in Rector's, one of Broadway's pre-prohibition famous restaurants. They nearly killed him.

Will Rogers, cowboy humorist, was an actor then. He made several extemporaneous epigrams on the war. George M. Cohan began writing the song "Over There." William Jennings Bryan, former secretary of state and noted peace advocate, telegraphed the President, offering his war services.

Alvin York, a farmer boy of Tennessee, began putting things in order. He was to become one of many American doughboy heroes. From office, factory, farm and college began a trek of American boys to the nearest enlistment depot.

It's just a memory now, but the wounded veterans in government hospitals could tell you how it felt on April 6, 1917.

3 DIE IN EASTER RIOTING

JERUSALEM, April 6.—(INS.)—Three Jews, including a woman, were fatally wounded and five others were injured today when two unidentified assailants fired into a party of 11 near the city of Haifa.

The Haifa shooting was the only bloodshed reported over a tense week-end. Authorities had marshalled all armed forces in anticipation of trouble, as Christian, Jewish and Moslem holidays coincided.

Steel-helmeted troops and machine guns were in evidence everywhere in Jerusalem over Easter. Jaffa Gate, leading to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, the Wailing Wall and the Mosque of Omar were heavily guarded.

GANDHI REFUSES AID AT PARLEY

NEW DELHI, April 6.—(AP.)—Mahatma Gandhi has decided to dispense with the aid of erstwhile colleagues at the forthcoming round table conference at London and will represent the Nationalist cause there by himself.

Several of Gandhi's associates, especially Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, are understood to be greatly disappointed at the decision which will deprive them of places at the London council table. Gandhi will take Miss Madeline Slade, daughter of an English admiral, as his personal attendant and secretary.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Pa., April 6.—(AP.)—Harry Shaffstall, 38, of Lykens, was killed and his wife, Mrs. Lucy Shaffstall, was seriously injured when their automobile skidded off the highway, crashed into a culvert and overturned.

The driver, Herbert Welker, 22, of Philadelphia, Miss Helen Roman, Philadelphia, and Robert Morgan, 3, of Lykens, also were injured, none seriously.

Woman Writer Plans Own Funeral

NEW YORK, April 6.—(AP.)—Before she died, Dr. Clara Barrus, 66, author and biographer of John Burroughs, made arrangements for her own funeral.

There will be no religious service, no eulogies by a clergyman. Instead, selections will be read from the writing of Burroughs and Walt Whitman. The funeral will be held tomorrow in Scarsdale.

ENGINEER SURE WILKINS PLANS WILL SUCCEED

Mechanic Battling Seas For 17 Years, Seeks No Thrills On Arctic Trip

A hardy, sea-traveled lot are the 18 Americans who will accompany Sir Hubert Wilkins in the trans-Polar submarine Nautilus when it dives under the Arctic ice pack in one of the greatest adventures of all time. They are prepared to risk their lives to reach the North Pole. Why they are going and who they are is answered in a series of personality sketches, one of which is given below. It deals with William W. Danenhower, first assistant engineer.

By HERMAN GIESKE

YONKERS, N. Y., April 6.—I'm not a thrill-hunter—I'm convinced this trip is mechanically feasible, or I wouldn't go.

Thus speaks up William W. Danenhower, first assistant engineer of the trans-polar submarine Nautilus, in which Sir Hubert Wilkins and 19 others propose to reach the North Pole.

Thirty-seven years old and inured to the hardships of ocean and submarine life for the last 17 years, Danenhower declared his belief the expedition ultimately will be hailed as a "great pioneer scientific achievement." He said further:

"Once it has been demonstrated that a submarine can travel in fair comfort from one edge to the other of the Polar basin, I look to see regular flotillas of subsea boats put in service in that bleak area. Due to submarine travel its final mysteries will be penetrated, and our voyage will become commonplace."

SEES NO HARDSHIPS

Of illustrious old American stock is Danenhower. His grandfather, whose name he bears, stumped the state of Illinois for Abraham Lincoln and was afterward recognized by the Civil War President by being given a Treasury post.

The result was the Danenhower family removed to Washington, where the first assistant engineer of the Nautilus now makes his home. Even-tempered, resourceful in emergency, Danenhower declared he thought it would be no terrific hardship, even should the Nautilus be trapped in an Arctic ice floe. He explained:

"Our boat was frozen in the St. Lawrence ice for 18 days during 1915, and we all managed to survive. I imagine the Nautilus, too, will be able to emerge from various ice perils. All has been done that can be done to foresee the various emergencies."

Danenhower is a first cousin of Capt. Sloan Danenhower, skipper of the Nautilus, but aboard ship one would never perceive any kinship. Engineer Danenhower takes orders from Skipper Danenhower just as though no blood tie bound them. Neither presumes on their relationship in any matter pertaining to the discipline of the ship.

SUBMARINE EXPERT

The two Danenhowers have been associated, however, for many years in various salvaging enterprises. Engineer Danenhower has come through many a sea crisis, but the worst, he believes, was when he was trapped aboard a partially-salvaged wreck, that of the English bark Kathneshire in the Gulf of Mexico.

A hurricane blew for three days before the half-dead salvage crew gained security and respite. Engineer Danenhower was aboard the submarine Defender in 1929, off Block Island, when it was proved that one submarine could assist another in rescue and salvage work.

He spent some years as general manager of the Bahama-West Indies Trading Company. During the World War he entered the Navy and was commissioned an ensign.

A thorough-going submarine man is Danenhower. Posted beside one of the Nautilus' big Diesels, he seems almost as substantial. And the others aboard the ship have vast confidence in him. They vow:

DO YOU KNOW WHAT YOU GET IN THE NEW OAKLAND V-8

FOR ONLY $984 DELIVERED EQUIPPED

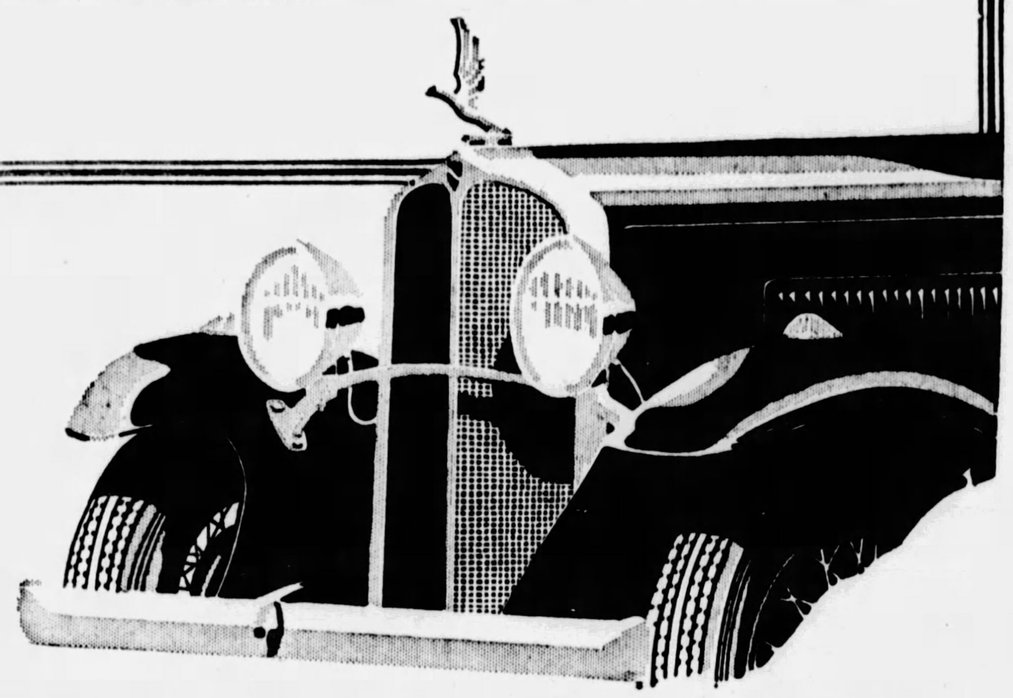
THIS IS THE PRICE OF THE TWO-DOOR SEDAN OR COUPE, equipped and delivered in Pittsburgh. Sport Coupe $1064. Four-door Sedan or Convertible Coupe $1084. Custom Sedan $1144. All cars equipped with front and rear bumpers, shock absorbers, 5 wire wheels, extra tire, tube and tire lock.



Here is a simple list of features, but a list that means more than pages of generalization. Read this list carefully and you will have the plain, unvarnished facts. Consider these facts in the light of your own experience as a motorist and you will see clearly that the new Oakland V-8 is "an inexpensive version of the finest."

85 H.P. V-8 ENGINE—Long a recognized major advantage in cars notable for performance, the V-type engine as developed by Oakland balances surprising brilliance with gratifying dependability. The ample, instantly responsive flow of power is smooth and even at all speeds.

SYNCRO-MESH TRANSMISSION—Heretofore found only in costly cars, Syncro-Mesh shifting is now a standard feature of the Oakland. Easy, clashless, quiet—permitting a shift up or down without effort or annoyance . . . Syncro-Mesh adds new pleasure and new safety to motoring.

QUIET SECOND GEAR—A new design makes Oakland's second gear almost as quiet as "high"—an important factor in rapid acceleration.

INSULATED BODIES BY FISHER—New interpretations of style, comfort and roominess. New protection against excessive temperatures, noise, and inclement weather. The famous Fisher wood-and-steel construction has been further improved to shut out heat, cold, and traffic clamor. Design and workmanship guard against leaks and rattles.

WHIPCORD OR MOHAIR UPHOLSTERY—Owners and their guests alike recognize the good taste, the lasting value, of Oakland's high quality upholstery. Closed cars have genuine whipcord or mohair—open cars, fine leathers.

RUBBER-CUSHIONED CHASSIS—Hidden from view at more than 40 points in the Oakland chassis, rubber insulation absorbs and deadens road shocks. Spring shackles cushioned with rubber not only add to driving ease but increase the car's steadiness on the road and greatly prolong its life.

OTHER OAKLAND FEATURES: Five wire wheels; one-piece fenders and fender indicator lamps; Lovejoy shock absorbers; heavy single-bar bumpers; new rugged rear axles with ball and roller bearings.

The fine workmanship, the careful attention to every detail of the Oakland V-8, naturally call for a personal inspection—just as the driving features suggest a personal test. We shall be glad to arrange a demonstration at your convenience and without obligation.

ENGLISH, EVANS PASS LIE AGAIN

Councilman, Ex-Controller Clash Over Reports on Debt; Hearing Renewed

him of telling over the radio in the last campaign. He said:

"The 'dirty lies' I told over the radio in the last campaign were an outline statement of the detailed facts I have now proved in this hearing."

English's verbal shafts were prefaced by a lengthy prepared statement, in which he pointed out that during Evans' tenure of office, from January 7 to November 29, 1929, he had furnished Council with six debt statements, the last on June 22, 1929. Winters was elected to office in November and did not take office until December 6.

Evans interrupted him with:

"Do you still say that you couldn't get a debt statement while I was controller?"

English replied:

"I'm sticking right to my statement—I don't care to be interrogated by you."

URGES SHOWDOWN

There was further bickering, in which Evans, English and Garland took part, English claiming that the matter should be pushed to a conclusion out of respect to the memory of Mr. Winters and Councilman George Kambach.

Most of today's short session was taken up with further testimony relating to the Lincoln avenue widening project, during which the practice of buying new and re-used lumber was explained by Thomas Marshall, a city inspector. Marshall said that he had never seen any old lumber brought to the job and expained that items listed in contracts as "reused" lumber is not in fact "reused lumber," but merely a term employed to pay the contractor for the expense of relaying it on another part of the improvement.

It was brought out by Marshall that about 306,000 feet of lumber had been used on the job, and that, as a matter of fact, the city had paid for only 285,000.

COMPLIMENTS WITNESS

When Marshall finished, Herron said:

"You are the most accurate witness we have yet heard."

Joining with Herron in praising the witness Evans said:

"I think you should have been the superintendent on the job instead of inspector."

Marshall, laughing said:

"I think so too, but a lot of others don't."

When the city buys as second hand lumber the same material it has previously purchased on a job as new lumber, the second charge is largely to cover the cost of the work, rather than the material itself, Ross Reigel, an assistant engineer in the Public Works Department, explained following the hearing.

He said when new lumber is used an allowance for overhead and labor is made to the contractor, but when old lumber is used the contractor is not allowed to make such a charge, but gets his compensation in the cost allowed him for second hand lumber.

CONTRACTOR ON STAND

John J. Ryan, of Dunn & Ryan, contractors, who were employed by the city on the Lincoln avenue improvement, was questioned at length by the former City Controller relative to the source of broken stone and lumber used on the job.

Ryan said that the broken stone was bought at his own quarries and hauled to the job from his store yards at 3918 Swinbourne street in his own trucks. Much of the lumber, he testified, was salvaged from the Grant street improvement.

Ryan followed Antes Snyder, a city engineer, to the stand. Snyder said that 256,27 board feet of lumber had been used on the improvement in Lincoln avenue in constructing footways, private entrances, intersections and loading platforms. Snyder said the lumber was bought and used three or four times as reused lumber. He denied that any reused lumber had been brought from any other improvement.

The standard price of lumber at the time of the Lincoln avenue improvement averaged from $47 to $50 a thousand feet, according to testimony of John J. Croak, assistant to Chief Engineer Charles M. Reppert. It has been previously testified that new lumber had cost the city $60 a thousand board feet.

LANG REORGANIZES

Council received a letter from Public Works Director Edward G. Lang in which he announced a reorganization of departmental methods of letting city contracts, particularly as they relate to the purchase of lumber. The plan, in which the necessity for care is urged, follows recommendations made by Chief Engineer Reppert last week.

During Snyder's testimony it developed that old ties had been purchased by the city as new lumber. In amplification of this, Attorney Lee C. Beatty, counsel for Director Lang, said that such practice might be held as lawful since the city paid for only two inches, whereas the thickness of ties unusually is eight inches thick.

The board of directors and past presidents of the Engineers Society of Western Pennsylvania met late today and considered the request of City Council for a board of engineers to investigate the methods of estimating and awarding city improvement contracts. Action was deferred until Friday when another meeting will be held.

The meeting adjourned at noon until tomorrow at 1 o'clock.

FLOOD DANGER PASSES

The dangers of a flood or serious property damage by continued high water passed today as the rivers gradually receded after reaching a stage of 24.5 feet at the Point. This level, highest in more than a year, was reached early yesterday after the record rainfall of Thursday and Friday.

Creeks which overran their banks Saturday also showed a gradual recession. The creeks throughout the district caused heavy damage and claimed one life, a Westmoreland County youth having drowned in Jacobs Creek.

Twenty-five employes of the Duquesne Slag Products Company, who were marooned on an island in Chartiers Creek over the week-end, were back at their work today, safe from the high waters. The men, employed in changing the course of Chartiers Creek near Scully yards, were trapped Saturday morning. They were able to cross to the mainland yesterday.

CHICAGO VOTES TOMORROW

CHICAGO, April 6.—(INS.)—Chicago voters—1,000,000 of them, according to an official estimate—will go to the polls tomorrow to choose either William Hale Thompson (Rep.), or Anton J. Cermak (Dem.), for mayor.

Balloting will terminate one of the hardest-fought campaigns in the city's political history.

Thompson, who has become a national figure during his three terms in the mayorship, has predicted he will receive "the greatest majority ever given me." Cermak, president of the Cook County Board, foresaw a Democratic landslide paralleling the one which returned James Hamilton Lewis to the Senate from Illinois.

Capone May Have a Navy to us that the cities should get together and compare notes.

Why not standardize their laws? And make the punishment fit the crime instead of fitting the size of the criminal's bankroll?

There has been some talk of going back to the vigilante days of San Francisco when the law was about 15 feet long with a loop at the end.

Now, its all loops.

Looks better since the government stepped in and is taking charge. Not that Washington can stop the depredations and machine gunning. But it can make the boys pay a tax on their capers.

We finally have a man in Washington who understands the gangsters. He plastered an assessment to ten grand on a bootlegger, who called up and asked:

"Is this an income tax?"

The federal collector said:

"Nope. The government has muscled in for 10 per cent of your racket."

It's an enforcement breath-smeller for prohibition officers.

The cops have experimented on each other. And it's a success.

It traps alcoholic exhalations. The suspected breath is blown into a 10-cent toy balloon.

The way you suspect a breath is to use the nose as a clue. If the nose looks guilty the breath cannot be far away.

Fill the balloon. Then the breath is run through a liquid which turns white if there is any alcohol lurking in the gloaming.

When you are winded you say to the officer, "Gimme back my balloon. I'm out of breath."

Toy balloons may be all right for Indianapolis. But they will have to use blimps in Chicago.

And Zeppelins in New York and Los Angeles.

We are willing to make that balloon breathing test for the police of New Orleans or Toledo. But first they've got to strap a parachute on our back.

The combination of alcohol and ballooning is a dangerous duet.

Blowing up a balloon is like playing a rubber saxaphone. You don't make any music but your eyes pop out like gophers in a prairie fire.

Your head whirls like a picnicker after a brass ring. In other words if you are not intoxicated before you start blowing up balloons you will be when you have finished inflating the third one.

So we say this is not a fair test. Either for the suspected person. Or for the balloon.

MORTALITY GAIN SHOWN HERE

Pittsburgh and Philadelphia had higher death rates during the first quarter of 1931 than the average for 81 of the largest cities in the country, it was revealed in Washington today by Dr. C. B. Maits, director of public health here, said the increase is due to respiratory disease.

Announcement came from the Department of Commerce. Mortality in Philadelphia is 16.2 per 1,000 population, Pittsburgh 18.1 and Erie 11.6. The metropolitan average is 14. Both Philadelphia and Pittsburgh reported increases from the [illegible] corresponding period.

Dr. Maits explained that deaths reported from Pittsburgh are for residents and non-residents. Pneumonia deaths for January of this year totaled 986, an increase of 191 over the same month last year. Of this total, 839 were deaths of persons living in the city.

February, with 880 resident deaths, and a total of 1035, shows an increase of 226 over the same month last year. March will show an increase as great as that of February, it was said, with 838 resident deaths, and a total of 1,000.

HOUSTON, Tex., April 6.—(INS.)—A flood of messages poured in on L. D. Buchanan here today from persons all over the country inquiring about their chances to participate in the $850,000,000 estate Buchanan announced was to be divided soon among heirs of William Buchanan, cousin of former President James Buchanan.

He said that property leased 99 years ago by his forebear had reverted this year to the Buchanan estate and that attorneys are preparing to sell it and divide the proceeds.

The property, much of it located in important towns in New York, North and South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee and Pennsylvania, has grown immensely valuable, he said.

TROLLEY LINES GO TO RECEIVER

The Harmony Route and Butler Short Lines today were placed in the charge of Maurice R. Scharff as receiver appointed in Federal Court, following the filing of a bill in equity by their holding company, the Harmony Short Line Railway, Bus and Land Company, a Delaware corporation.

The action was taken against the Harmony, Butler and New Castle Railway Company and the Pittsburgh, Mars and Butler Railway Company, of which David I. McCahill and Harry Etheridge are president and vice president, respectively, of both companies. They are likewise officers and principal stockholders of the holding company. Harmony Line liabilities approximate $152,000, with assets of $750,000. The Short Line liabilities are reported at $435,000 with $500,000 assets. The greater portion of both companies' liabilities is owed to the affiliated corporations.

ELIMINATE 559 VOTING PLACES

Announcing the elimination of 559 voting districts in the county, N. R. Criss, chairman of the Redistricting Board of Allegheny County, presented a petition to Judge Harry H. Rowand in Quarter Session Court today fixing the new polling places in the boroughs and townships.

The petition stipulated the elimination of the districts would represent an annual saving of $161,785. It also represents a $569,621 saving on the purchase of voting machines, the report says.

ABSOLUTE APRIL 17

The report will become absolute Friday, April 17, unless exceptions are filed before that date.

The chairman announced he would present a final report recommending election officers and registry assessors for each of the newly-created districts.

In the boroughs, 131 of the original 395 districts were eliminated; 57 of the 233 township districts were disposed of, and in a previous report 371 districts in the cities of Pittsburgh, Clairton and McKeesport were eliminated.

SAVINGS LISTED

The annual saving in election costs to the county is represented as follows: Judges of election, $19,565; inspectors, $22,360; clerks, $22,360; constables, $5,590; registration officers, $55,200; third-class cities' registration officers, $2,080; registry assessors, $17,860, and poll rent, $16,770.

In addition, the installation of voting machines in each of the 899 new districts will eliminate clerks, representing an annual saving of $17,980.

NORMAN MEETS RESERVE BOARD

WASHINGTON, April 6—(INS.)—Gov. Montagu Norman, of the Bank of England, met with Secretary Mellon and the Federal Reserve Board at a regular session held today. Gov. Eugene Meyer and Comptroller of the Currency J. W. Pole attended the session.

Although Norman, on previous visits to Washington, has called upon officials informally, this is the first time he attended a regular meeting of the Reserve Board, and the presence of Mellon indicated that important matters were under discussion.

So far, neither Norman nor American officials have thrown any light on the nature of the English banker's mission in the United States.

Gown Catches Fire, Child Dies of Burns

Burns received when her nightgown caught fire from a bathroom stove proved fatal today to Bessie Stein, 7, of 716 Anaheim street, in Montefiore Hospital, according to a report to the county morgue.

Real Estate

The Ben F. Williams Company, Mt. Lebanon brokers, has sold for W. Warren Miller to C. L. Alexander, an eight-room brick home with two baths in Mt. Lebanon boulevard.

The Pennsylvania College for Women has applied for a building permit to construct a brick and stone library building on the college campus, Woodland road. The structure will adjoin the new Buhl Science Hall and will be of similar architectural design as the other college buildings. Construction work will begin immediately, according to the building committee. In the application for a building permit the valuation of the new building was set at $75,000.

Four houses at 1139-41-43-45 King avenue, East End, have been traded by Hattie Laughlin for a modern seven-room bungalow at Gibsonia, Richland Township, owned by Agnes Harris. The bungalow was valued at $15,500 and the four houses at $32,500. The difference was paid in cash, according to Ira Aricson, downtown broker, who consummated the exchange.

The entire first floor of the newly-constructed sales and service automobile building, 5208-12 Center avenue, has been leased to the Truckford Display Company, Inc., by Sol and Louis Bennett through the offices of the Porter & MacDowell Company. The tenant will take immediate possession for a term of years.

A modern two and a half-story brick house in the Evergreen Heights plan, Ross Township, has been sold for $9,000 by Frank J. Heintz to Stanley J. Jackson. The broker was Benjamin B. Moore.

Two lots, each 70x198 feet, in Longuevue drive, Mt. Lebanon, have been sold by Thomas A. Peebles and John M. Hopwood to Fred J. Blakeley. The consideration was $8,000.

Applications for building permits:

100 IN CHURCH CLUB HELD UP

PHILADELPHIA, April 6—(AP.)—Six youths, each brandishing two revolvers and wearing handkerchief masks, held up more than 100 members of the St. Thomas Aquinas Catholic Club in the basement of a parochial school late last night and escaped with about $250 in cash.

Club members were bowling and playing billiards when the youths entered. Five scattered about the room and drew their pistols at the command of their leader to: Throw up your hands and line up against the wall.

The youths searched their victims quickly, ran to the street and drove away in an automobile.

FIREMAN HURT IN STILL BLAZE

One fireman was injured fighting a fire at 620 Manilla way believed, police say, to have been caused by an overheated moonshine still. The damage, confined to the second floor of the property where the still was located, was estimated at $1,500. The injured fireman was Nicholas Palermo, of Engine Company No. 38. He was cut about the face by broken glass.

East End police were questioning Tony Arcuri, a resident of the first floor of the building, to determine ownership of the still, 20 barrels of mash, a quantity of corn sugar and a small quantity of moonshine whisky found on the second floor. Arcuri denied ownership.

Thaw in English Port—Scorns Country

SOUTHAMPTON, England, April 6—(AP.)—Harry Thaw arrived yesterday on the Europa at this port, where he was forbidden to enter England in 1928, but this time he did not try to go ashore. He said:

"I have no intention of trying to land in England. Why should I come to a hell-fire country like this? I'm going to Germany, which is much more interesting, and after that to Czecho-Slovakia. I have an invitation to stay with the President."

FIRE BATTLED AT RUSSELLTON

A two-story brick building, housing a barber shop and two apartments was destroyed by fire at Russellton No. 2, on the Little Deer Creek road, early today. Firemen estimated the damage at $10,000. Fire companies from Culmersville, Cheswick and Springdale fought the blaze for more than two hours.

The building was owned by Leonard Rocco, who conducted the barber shop on the first floor. He resided in the rear first floor apartment. The second floor apartment was occupied by Dr. George Smith, a dentist, his wife and child.

PITTSBURGHER THEFT VICTIM

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., April 6.—(AP.)—John O'Brian, who gave his address as 229 Liberty avenue, Pittsburgh, reported to police today that a bellboy of a side avenue hotel, had vanished with $12,000 given him to place in the safe for overnight keeping.

O'Brian told detectives he had gone to his room at a late hour, forgetting about the large sum of money he was carrying. He said he called a boy to take the money down to the desk.

Detectives visited the boy's residence but learned that both he and his wife had disappeared.

Japan-U. S. Flight Starts April 26

TOKIO, April 6.—(AP.)—Hochi Shimbun, Japanese newspaper, announced today that the flight of Saiji Yoshiwara to the United States via Russia, Alaska and Canada would be called the "Japan-America Amity Flight."

Yoshiwara will take off from here April 26. He plans to arrive at Seattle May 13 and San Francisco May 16. From there he will fly across the United States to Washington and New York.

Lynchings in U. S. Increase in 1930

NEW YORK, April 6.—(AP.)—Lynchings in the nation during 1930 totaled 21, more than double the number of 1929, the commission on race relations of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America announced today.

Nine states were the scenes of lynchings, which took the lives of one white man and 20 Negroes. This compared with 10 lynchings in five states in 1929.

The Young Men and Women's Hebrew Association again introduced to our music lovers one of the recent stars last night in presenting Jose Iturbi, pianist. There was not a trivial work on the program; quite the contrary, there was music to represent the greatest epochs in all piano music.

Mr. Lissfelt

Iturbi is a most astonishing player. He can depart farther from tradition than any player and still be entertaining enough by his theatricalities to carry away his audience. His hands, like a magician's, keep the public's mind amazed and away from the sound they are making. For the Mozart he invented embellishments all his own, for the Beethoven an extra display of temper, for his Chopin sugar-coated effects which might be double-rubatos, if there were such a term in music.

Iturbi's singing tone is sometimes enchanting, his pianissimo really haunting, but his louder effects hard as a result of tense muscular strain. There is a glaring similarity in applying all these dynamics, all the more noticeable since there were endless variations for the first hour of his concert.

His Mendelssohn was a revlation in delicate playing, and the Albeniz equally fine as to color. And altogether entrancing was the music of Tansman on our American contribution to music, even more so Iturbi's playing of these sensual chromatics.

J. FRED LISSFELT.

SUN-TELEGRAPH

Expert Urges Individual Convict Care

In the first of series of articles written for the Sun-Telegraph by noted authorities, in which are discussed the causes of prison abuses and unrest and riots, and in which are suggested remedies for one of the most serious problems confronting so many states, Dr. Edwin H. Sutherland, professor of sociology at the University of Chicago, takes for his subject, "Prison Administration." He bases this digest on a profound study made by him of prisons in Illinois and other states, as well as in England and continental Europe. Articles by other specialists in prison study will follow.

By DR. EDWIN H. SUTHERLAND
Author of "Criminology," a widely studied text book.

The fundamental difficulty in the prison system of Illinois is the limitation on the power of the prison authorities to adapt the treatment to the needs of the individual prisoner, and limitation on the facilities for doing this. This limitation is due partly to the laws, partly to the physical equipment, partly to the sentiments of the public.

The warden has no authority and little influence in regard to the time of release of prisoners. The old prison at Joliet is so crowded that no space for outdoor recreation is available. The new prison at Statesville is already too small.

In both institutions the prisoners are lumped together with little discrimination and with little possibility of securing individual attention.

CONVICTS SULLEN

For 18 months the prisoners in the state prisons of Illinois have been sullen, bitter and tense. Riots have been prevented with great difficulty. The prisoners have a feeling of injustice. The fundamental complaint has been the severity of the parole board. The killing of escaping prisoners and the death of a prisoner in solitary confinement were merely sparks that kindled the flame. Surprisingly little complaint has been made in regard to food and similar conditions that often bulk large in prison riots.

A feeling of injustice is the fundamental cause of prison riots. A few prison riots are started for the purpose of facilitating escape, and a few are merely rowdyism. But a riot which has been developing for 18 months is based on a substantial feeling of injustice.

The prison authorities, who have been close to the prisoners, have appreciated this feeling. They promised to use their influence to secure modifications in the policies of the parole board. They have been unable to effect a change.

LAW RESTRICTS BOARD

The parole board, in turn, is limited by the law so that they have been unable to grant paroles to prisoners sentenced under the law which fixed a minimum term of 10 years. They probably have been limited even more by the pressure of certain individuals and agencies in the state who have favored more severe penalties.

Ten years ago a wave of sentiment swept over the country in favor of greater severity. Minimum penalties were raised and severe penalties were made mandatory. Authority was taken from parole boards and courts to adjust the treatment to the individual. The Baumes' commission in New York state was the leader in this movement.

The increased severity had little apparent effect on crime, and judges and juries were unwilling to convict criminals because of the mandatory provisions of these laws.

The authorities of the state of Illinois have the power to release the prisoners sentenced with the 10-year minimum. The governor can grant conditional pardons in which the supervision could be exactly the same as in parole, and which would differ from parole only in name and the source of the authority to release. If the prisoners are held in prison it will be because some authority wishes them to be held there.

The law which fixed a minimum term of 10 years and has now been repealed should not automatically hold all of them for 10 years. It is possible to grant releases in cases in which the individual character justifies it, and this can be done without additional legislation.

PONTIAC CONVICTS BUSY

But a feeling of injustice is not a sufficient explanation of riots. The same feeling of injustice exists in the state reformatory at Pontiac, and Pontiac has had no riots. The difference is probably due principally to the fact that the prisoners in Pontiac have less time to brood over the injustice. They are kept busy more continuously in industrial, educational and recreational activities.

Prison administration is more successful in England. The number of criminals committed to prisons in England decreased from 156,188 in 1912 to 44,923 in 1927.

The prison sentences are much shorter in England than in the United States for the same crimes. The time of release is determined principally by the recommendations of the guards and other prison officers who know the prisoners intimately.

The prisons are small, seldom having more than 500 inmates. The prison guards are competent to make recommendations regarding release, for they are all appointed from the graduates of a training school for prison officers.

The problem is more difficult in the United States than in England, and certainly the English methods could not be used in the United States without some adaptation.

When Sanford Bates was made commissioner of federal prisons, after a long and successful period as commissioner of correction of Massachusetts, one of the first things he did was to organize a school for prison guards and make his appointments from the graduates of that school.

In many places the prison is coming to be regarded as, in part, an educational institution. The warden of the German prison at Untermassfeld had received a doctor's degree in education before he was employed in the prison, and two or three other officers in this prison have doctors' degrees in social sciences.

CHANGES PROPOSED

First, a study should be made of the changes in the severity of the parole board over a 10-year period.

Second, a study should be made of all persons held in prison under the 10-year minimum law for the purpose of determining which ones are most likely to be safe in society if released, and those who are the best risks should be recommended to the governor for conditional pardons.

Third, training courses for guards should be developed and should be required of those already employed and of new appointments.

Fourth, extraordinary efforts should be made to obtain markets for the prison commodities, so that the prisoners may be employed steadily for at least eight hours a day.

Fifth, the reconstruction of the prison and the completion of the cell block under construction should be done by prison labor regardless of the length of time required for this. Nothing is so important as to keep the prisoners employed.

A small prison housing not more than 500 inmates and constructed with minimum security, should be provided for prisoners whose terms are almost completed or for others who are dependable. Additional small units of this type, with varying degree of security, should be constructed from time to time, so that the old prison at Joliet can be abandoned.

REVIVAL OF OPERETTA AND SCREENING OF ADVENTURE TALE ARE REVIEWED

Schubert Blossoms Out For Another Week In the Alvin

By GEORGE SEIBEL

Good music flourishes in all weathers—doesn't even depend on the stock barometer or the political outlook. That was proved on Saturday night when "Blossom-Time" came back again to the Alvin, and the people also came back again to the Alvin, thirsty as ever for the melodies that have sung themselves into men's hearts for over a century.

George Seibel

It was Schubert Night. When Joseph Lertora, who plays the jealous Count Sharnoff, told Schubert in the last act that he was an immortal genius, the audience applauded. The applause wasn't for the elocution, but for the sentiment. The audience wanted Count Sharnoff to know he had made no mistake. They agreed with him and made it unanimous.

This music reaches the heart while jazz stuns the tympani and stirs the toes. When "Peter Ibbetson" was first played by John and Lionel Barrymore, the audience wept all over the theater. Few realized that it was the incidental music of Schubert's "Staendchen" that softened them to the sorrows of Peter. And the "Ave Maria"—words by Sir Walter Scott—has brought many a dollar into the collection plate.

A GREAT SINGING CAST

Let no one think that the performance at the Alvin, which is presented at popular prices, is cheap or tawdry. It has a great singing cast. The voices are fresh and young and smooth, which was evident as soon as Marice Christie, the Greta, started selling her flowers.

John Charles Gilbert is a bit plump for a starving composer, but he looks just like the Schubert portraits, and he plays the shy, gentle, jovial, honest and lovable genius with perfect sympathy. His voice, like the other voices in the cast, has the musical buoyancy required for the romantic score.

Greta Alpeter, who sang Mitzi, put an irresistible lyric lilt into her numbers, while Marie Starner as Kitzi danced gracefully to the "Moment Musical." Mary Wilkins in the role of Fritzi was worthy of her sisters.

ALSO A GOOD PRODUCTION

Not only are all the voices remarkably good, but the production looks fresh and blossomy. The Prater was festive and gay, the chorus was frisky and fair, the costumes were redolent of fresh Easter dyes.

It is not a garish production, not a cheap production, but an honest and intelligent setting for these musical gems. After all this operetta is Franz Schubert. What Berte or Romberg did to it—what they added or took away—doesn't matter. It is Franz Schubert, the shy soul that overflowed with the sweetest music ever written. And the music is what will draw people to the Alvin for the no-one-knows-how-manieth week of "Blossom Time."

Plays, Players and By-Play

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"Trader Horn," motion picture that begins an engagement of twice-a-day showings in the Nixon today was filmed by a company that was first to take sound-recording apparatus into the African jungles. It has wild animals, wild men and wild women. (If you had to live there you'd be wild, too.) Daily matinees are at 2:30 and the evening shadows begin to fall on the screen at 8:30.

* * *

* * *

"Blossom Time" tonight again takes the Alvin customers back to the days when Franz Schubert was a good composer but no composed love-maker. Matineers may sit in cheers either Wed. or Sat. or both.

Jane Cowl comes to the Alvin next week in "Twelfth Night," written in the Sixteenth Century —or thereabouts—by William Shakespeare for the especial benefit of Twentieth Century high school classes in English literature. It has always been one of the bard's most popular plays with audiences. One may get one's seat Thursday if one goes to the b. o. at that time.

* * *

"Stepping Sisters" will begin to tread the Pitt stage with the George Sharp Players tonight, and will keep it up for a week, with Thursday and Saturday afternoon exhibitions as well as nightly examples of pedestrianism.

Because "Death Takes a Holiday" was so popular when Mr. Sharp presented it a few weeks ago, it will be repeated in the Pitt one week hence. Paul McGrath and Ann Forrest will be seen as in the former presentation. A bad week for undertakers. Seats tomorrow.

Broun, Columnist, Will Speak Here

Heywood Broun, noted American columnist, will speak in Pittsburgh on Friday night, April 10, at Carnegie Music Hall. Broun's subject for discussion will be "It Seems to Me." That is the subject at the head of his column and those four words almost invariably come to mind when the name of Heywood Broun is mentioned.

"Trader Horn," Nixon Film, Is Amazing Picture Of Savage Drama

By WILLIAM J. LEWIS

"Trader Horn," which today begins a screen engagement in the Nixon, was witnessed at a special showing last night by an invited audience that learned more about Africa in two hours than it could through the medium of "Darkest Africa" and "White Cargo" combined. This "Trader Horn" photoplay is no spectacle of the degenerating influence of the tropics, as was "White Cargo" and it is even more gripping and dramatic. As a revelation of the nature of the Dark Continent, its topography, its natural beauties, its animal life and its native savagery it is fully as illuminating as anything Stanley ever wrote.

Its story, that of Aloysius Horn, as set forth in his book of a couple of years ago, follows the trail of the trader in his quest for ivory, accompanied by a young friend, Peru, their meeting with a woman missionary in search of her daughter, who had disappeared as a child, finding her as a priestess of a most savage tribe after it has made them captive, and the narrative of their further adventures.

These begin to be sensationally dramatic in the native camp, when the two white men and their native companion are in the midst of torture that is a ceremonial. Because two of the men are white, the priestess decides to save them. She alone escorts them across a lake in a boat, which drifts away, and they begin to fight their way back to the coast, afoot and unarmed. Three of them survive, the black paying for his faithfulness by receiving a spear in the back.

At times it is not a pretty picture, but it is stark realism—the realism of savage nature, sometimes terrifying but always intensely interesting. One sees hundreds of animals and reptiles of the tropics, preying on one another and attacking our travelers. And is it thrilling! How would you like to have a leopard walk up to you and you armed only with a club? Even if you knew that with the camera behind you was a gun! One actually sees a lion attacking the party killed with a spear that is merely a pole whittled to a sharp point.

There has been indicated here but a hint of the startling and interesting things in "Trader Horn," which was filmed in the very scenes of the story as told in the book. Scenic shots alone are marvelous. Especially a number of views of a beautiful waterfall, the roar of which is so great that the voices of the travelers cannot be heard even when they shout.

The players also do a good job of the only artificial thing about this photoplay—that is, the acting—the rest is all natural. Harry Carey gives an excellent portrayal of Trader Horn, and Edwina Booth is a regular spitfire savage as the blonde goddess, as she is regarded by the savage cannibal tribe. But it does not take long for her to learn one of civilization's oldest arts, that of kissing, in which she is tutored by Peru, played effectively by Duncan Renaldo.

With the exception of the white missionary, appearing only briefly, these and a Negro, Renchero, played by a genuine native African, are the only principals. Renchero, or whatever his name may be in his tribe, could show some Hollywood players how to act.

Things I Never Knew Till Now

(But which you knew all along!)

That Hi Phillips has just discovered that on Broadway "a man's word is as good as his blonde." (And the old answer, Hi, used to be: "And his blonde is a darn bad girl!")

That sound pictures are projected at the rate of 90 feet a minute, or 24 pictures to the second.

That shoe laces are mentioned in the Old Testament.

That, according to a Maine law, an author is prohibited from possessing his own personal copy of a book that has been suppressed.

That among other credos of seamen is that it is bad luck for a man to christen a ship, boat, submarine, etc. That is why the grandson of Jules Verne looked on while Lady Wilkins christened the Nautilus.

That in winter the center of the Brooklyn Bridge is three feet higher above the water than it is in the summer.

That there is not a shred of evidence to prove that Buffalo Bill ever fought or killed an Indian. Just another legend.

That the first astrological map was made by the Chinese and contained 1,460 stars. (He must get that stuff out of books!)

That the ancients pulled their sleeves over their heads (to hide a smile) when giving you the horse-laugh. Hence the expression.

That ancient kings and nobles signed documents with an X, as few of them ever learned to read or write.

That Iceland has neither policemen nor prisons.

That San Marino is the oldest existing republic. It has had 10 centuries of uninterrupted existence.

That the peachmond is a new fruit from Mexico. It is hybrid between a peach and the almond. Tasty, too.

That the etiquette books call you a dope if you do not use a fork to eat your club sandwich.

That if you would have good cab manners, then when riding with a lady she should sit on your right. I like mine on my lap.

That it is supposed to be bad form for a hotel guest to tip a chambermaid unless the money is in an envelope. Poof!

That the Siamese Twins are so-called because the first set—brothers named Chang and Eng (who lived to be 63 years old) were born of a Siamese mother. The old man was a Chinese.

That authorities have found that nearly all the great men had blue, gray or blue-gray eyes. Ahem!

RIVETER AND HEIRESS IN FARCE ROMANCE IN THE DAVIS

By MILDRED FILLMORE

Every riveter and every heiress will enjoy the picture at the Davis this week, because Ben Lyon as a riveter and Ona Munson as an heiress demonstrate the fallacy of the opening song, "Nobody loves a riveter but his mother."

"The Hot Heiress" is a trashy title, but the picture is an amusing farce with a romantic undercurrent. The riveter, working on a skyscraper, lets a red-hot rivet fly through the window into the room where Ona is reposing in the most negligible of negligees. The rivet starts a fire and the riveter crosses on a board to put it out. That starts another blaze in two hearts.

During the maneuvers necessary to get the heiress riveted to Ben Lyon, the pair wear every sort of dress and undress, from bathing suits to soup and fish.

They wear these clothes as if they had been born in them, and commit enough faux pas to keep everybody in a roar. Week-end parties and charity bazars alternate with chop suey excursions and lunches on steel girders.

Ben and Ona have a swiftly moving farce with romantic trimmings which ought to cause hearts to flutter in Park avenue and the Riveters' Union headquarters. Foolish, but funny!

The cleverest thing in these programs is the "Terry-Toon," which this week shows the adventures of an explorer who comes back with the North Pole.

TRADER HORN

"Thrilling realism is spliced cleverly with rugged fiction. Shrewdly fashioned jungle melodrama thoroughly exciting. Mr. Van Dyke has succeeded in conveying a keen sense of danger. It is a sleepless nightmare in the dark and the days are full of blood-curdling experiences. For this sort of excitement there has been nothing like it seen on the screen."
—Mordaunt Hall, N. Y. Times

"Breath-taking. A picture among pictures. Packed with thrills and beauty. Don't miss 'Trader Horn'. It's a magnificent achievement."
—Daily Mirror

"The fearsome, fascinating voice of Africa echoed along Broadway. There never was a picture like this. More hair-raising, spine-shivering excitement to every foot of film than may be boasted by any picture yet camera-captured. The first film in which the mighty, threatening roar of Africa has been imprisoned on a sound track. Such scenes as recur again and again have never before reached the screen. A thousand shots that will make audiences cling to their seats in a frenzy of fascination."
—Regina Crewe, American

"As thrilling as a trip to the Congo. Packs one punch after another. Always breath-taking. Vitally thrilling. Should fascinate Broadway audiences for some time to come."
—Irene Thirer, Daily News

"One is deeply thrilled—indeed, thrilled to a point of shouting almost—when the African gun-bearer hurls a spear into the brain of the charging lion when the beast is but a step from him. This will give you a terrific kick. There are several fights to the death, too."
—George Gerhard, Evening World

"The most hardened film-goers squirmed in their seats, a little breathlessly, as 'Trader Horn' was projected on the screen. The picture contains thrills as intense as I, for one, should care to witness. It is difficult to imagine more thrilling pictures of savage beasts than those in 'Trader Horn'. In fact, I don't see how more thrilling pictures could be gotten."

TELL IT TO SALLY

By SALLY MARTIN

Can a Lady Love Two Men At the Same Time?

"Impossible!" you say. That's what Bette would have said—once. Like you she believed that marriage settled hearts for keeps. Then, to her horror, she discovered that wedded hearts are as restless as single ones!

It all began when Jack, the erstwhile whirlwind lover, settled down into a Regular Husband. Apparently Jack had heard that old saw, "I've caught my street car now I can snooze" . . . and snooze he did. Once, when Bette spoke, he had leaped to serve. Now he grunted! Once, when she kissed him, his heart had done a tap dance. Now he shoved her away and snarled, "Can'tja let a feller alone?"

Met Other Man

So presently can you blame her?—Bette began to wonder why she'd ever married. Or what she'd ever seen in Jack.

Then—you've guessed it—She Met the Other Man. They always do! And but I'll let her tell it.

"Dear Sally Martin—

"Oh, I am so miserable! I wonder if you can tell me what's the matter with me. I'm in love with a man . . . or boy rather . . . who isn't my husband. And I can't seem to forget him although I love my husband, too. Do you think that's impossible, Sally? I would have thought so, too, once. But now I know, to my sorrow, that it isn't.

"It's really my husband's fault that I fell in love with this other man. He neglected me till I was nearly crazy. There has never been anything between this other man and me. Only that I love him, and want to forget him. He doesn't even know the way I feel.

"Before I married Jack, he was all attention and affection. After we were married, all that seemed to fly out of the window. I craved love and affection, and I never got it. Jack actually acted as if he wasn't even interested in me. He never spoke to me unless I said something first, and then he'd either grunt or not answer me at all. He acted like I was just a piece of excess baggage. If I tried to kiss him, he'd push me away, and say, 'Oh, leave me alone!' I felt dreadful about it all.

Can't Forget Him

"Finally, I bought myself some new clothes, got a permanent, made myself look as nice as I could. Then, when he still didn't notice me, I went out every night, leaving him with the baby.

"I just went by myself, with girls. I don't believe in 'cheating.' Well, I met Tom casually through a friend. We never went out together, but we met several times, by accident, and he was nice to me. So I fell in love with him. It sounds awful, doesn't it? It is, and that's just what's driving me crazy.

"Jack has changed now. When I left him home with the baby he didn't like it. I was very happy when he began arguing with me and saying it wasn't right for me to leave him night after night. Right there I told him what was wrong. That I didn't have anything to stay home for, that he wouldn't even talk to me, so I didn't think I was missed much.

"Well, we almost broke up our home. But we made up finally and we'd be very happy if it weren't for my love for Tom. Honestly, I do love Jack. Why can't I forget this other man? I want to. I hate myself sometimes when I can't. Is there something horribly wrong with me that I seem to love two men at once?

"Please help me. I'm so bewildered I don't know what to do. How can I get over being this way? Can a married woman fall for two men at the same time?

"BETTE."

She certainly can, Bette . . . if she let's herself! A wedding ring doesn't put blinders on us . . . or innoculate us against other gents with pleasing personalities and taking ways. Nor does it put a stop to the incurable restlessness and curiosity of the human heart.

Then does that mean that, although married to Jack, you've really fallen for Tommy in a Big Way?

It doesn't . . . and you haven't.

Headed for Disaster

Tommy was only a temporary thrill. You didn't know that loving wives ever wanted or yielded to Temporary Thrills. You didn't know that your husband could bore you . . . or that another man could excite you. You didn't believe that such things could happen in a "happy marriage." And because you were so ignorant—and so mad at Jack—they happened to you with devastating suddenness. And you call it "love."

It isn't love. It is only a restlessness, and a curiosity, and a longing for adventure which will always beset you as long as you live—because you're human as well as a wife. There's no danger in that, as long as you recognize facts and use sense and control. But these feelings will become dangerous if you get soppy and romantic about them . . . if you call them "love" . . . and decide that every passing twinge of curiosity is a sign that you should leave Jack and glom on to some other gentleman. Which is how you're feeling now about this Tommy person.

Stop it. Snap out of the romantics and be your age. You've taught Jack a much needed lesson . . . now learn one yourself. You're a married woman. You can be a happy married woman—if you'll work for that happiness. But unless you do work for it, by cutting out the thrills and living facts, you're certainly headed for disaster.

Let your heart go back to Jack, Bette, make it go back to Jack! Tommy isn't real. He's just the shadowy figure of romance that glimmers on the horizon for every femme. Your happiness—your real adventure—do not lie with Tommy. They lie in your home—in your husband—in the beautiful reality of today. Stop dreaming and go after them!

Fay King Stresses Need of Mothers' Love in Love Affairs of Children

IF YOU MARRY THAT GIRL, IT WILL KILL ME! I'D RATHER SEE YOU DEAD AND IN YOUR GRAVE! I'D NEVER LET YOU ENTER THIS HOUSE AGAIN!
HOW CAN YOU BE SO UNREASONABLE, MOTHER?
MOTHERS OFTEN REFUSE TO STAND BY THEIR SONS IN LOVE GUILTY OR NOT GUILTY YOU ARE MY PRECIOUS BOY, AND MOTHER WILL STAND BY YOU!
IN CRIME, MOTHERS FORGIVE ALL AND WILLINGLY MAKE EVERY SACRIFICE TO HELP THEIR SONS
I LOVE YOU! BUT IT WILL BREAK MOTHER'S HEART IF I MARRY YOU!
I DON'T WANT YOU TO BREAK YOUR MOTHER'S HEART — BUT HOW CAN SHE BE SO UNFAIR TO US!
FAY KING

By FAY KING

How quickly a mother rushes forward to take her son in her arms before the whole world when he is accused of committing a crime.

How sympathetic, understanding and willing she is to sacrifice herself to save that son.

The whole world is touched by such mother-love.

BUT—how slow and unwilling many of these mothers can be when it comes to standing by a son whose only "crime" is being in love with a girl of whom his mother does not approve.

If mothers would be as quick to bring just a little of that wonderful love and sacrifice to bear with a son in love, as they do with a son in crime—there would be more happiness in the world.

Madge Puts a Stop to Dicky's Actions

At my entreaty, which made me feel the champion hypocrite of all time, Mr. Veritzen's mouth relaxed into a smile and he bowed from the waist.

"I could refuse no request of yours," he said, impressively, and Dicky slapped him on the shoulder so heartily that my dignified employer almost lost his balance. My husband's face was guileless and beaming as the elder man straightened himself with an expression in his eyes which betrayed for an instant the active dislike I suspected was his for Dicky.

"That's the ticket!" Dicky said explosively. "But then, nobody can withstand my frau when she sets out to be hospitable. That's all settled then. We shall expect you for breakfast Christmas morning."

"No, not for breakfast," Mr. Veritzen said decidedly. "I am not fit for human company before breakfast."

"Who is?" Dicky queried. "But at the farmhouse Madge has a series of cages into which she drives us as soon as we arise and tosses us strips of raw meat until the first edge of our hunger is dulled. Then she lets us out for the regular breakfast. I'll have a nice little padded cage prepared for you if you'll join us."

Mr. Veritzen smiled, evidently with difficulty.

"Thank you, but I am afraid I must decline so tempting an offer. But I shall be delighted to accept your invitation to dinner."

"Then we're not going to tease you any more about anything else," I said with an effort at playfulness. "Come, Dicky, you really must stop it. But I'm so glad you're coming to dinner."

"So am I!" Lillian interposed with an intuition for which I blessed her. "It isn't often my old eyes can see a spectacle like 'Sophisticated Sandy' here devouring a turkey leg and I'm all of a twitter of anticipation. How about it, old dear? Wilt pull a wishbone mit me?"

Mr. Veritzen smiled reluctantly, but Dicky guffawed.

"If you promise to pull that stunt I'll take motion pictures of it," he said, and Mr. Veritzen's eyebrows narrowed.

"You'll also have to provide an extra turkey," I said quickly, "for Junior and Roderick have a lien on the two already scheduled."

"D'ye think I'd let a mere detail like that interfere with so wonderful a gift to posterity?" Dicky demanded but I had been edging away so that for an instant I was behind Mr. Veritzen and facing Dicky and I shook my head vehemently in a warning that he had gone far enough in raillery.

His face did not change, but he altered his tone immediately.

"All this talk of wishbones and turkey legs makes me hungry," he said. "When do we eat?"

"Again?" Lillian demanded incredulously playing up. "Dicky, you're hollow."

"Admitted," he said with a little bow. "But that doesn't answer my question."

"In an hour Mr. Seibel will have the buffet supper in readiness," I told him.

"But what am I to do until then?" he asked, and I saw that Mr. Veritzen's eyebrows had unknitted themselves, and that the tenseness of the moment before was over.

"Pull your belt together," admonished Lillian. "It won't hurt you to bant a bit," she added cruelly, and Dicky flushed over so slightly. There is no possible excuse for calling Dicky stout, but he is unduly sensitive over the slight increase in weight which has been his for the last year or two.

"Let's leave 'em, Veritzen," Dicky said, putting his hand on the other man's arm. "They're cold and cruel. They could laugh while a fellow perished before their eyes with starvation. I've seven-eighths of a notion to beat it to a quick lunch joint I know."

He marched Mr. Veritzen away, still grumbling audibly, and Lillian caught at my hand and squeezed it convulsively.

"Don't look at me or I shall explode," she begged, her voice choked with laughter. "Did you ever see anything equal to the way the Dicky-bird flayed old Phil and trussed him up ready for roasting? And not a word that Veritzen could object to. Oh, boy! You don't see anything as neat as that but once in a lifetime."

"He certainly solved a problem for me," I said. "I was so afraid Mr. Veritzen would think I was inviting him to Christmas dinner because—"

"Because you wanted him," Lillian finished dryly. "Yes, that might have been an inference as well as the other one—that Dicky didn't. But now, thanks to your clever husband, he hasn't a picture in his mind except that of an obedient wife docilely echoing her husband's enthusiastic invitation for Christmas dinner. And he's the most puzzled old hound dog in the whole island of Manhattan. But hist! also avast! What have we here? My question's answered about Mary!"

Tomorrow's Horoscope

Tuesday, April 7

The astral influences of this day may be interpreted as an extension of the high-powered intervention prevailing on the day before, with its promise of sudden and revolutionary change, affecting most beneficially the employment and holding promise of substantial achievements by strenuous and diligent efforts as well as by splended ingenuity, foresight and skill.

Those whose birthday it is are under excellent promise of a year of signal success and solid achievement, with much change or travel, promotion in employment, preferment and favors. But avoid rash moves, quarrels, litigation and fraud or misrepresentation.

A child born on this day should have brilliant talents and skill, with the prospect of an eventful and adventurous life, successful employment and favored by superiors. It may have a career of experiences and attainments out of the ordinary.

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Play Safe With Minor Infections of the Hand

In this age of machinery and electrical appliances, with the safety precautions which have been set up, injuries of the hands are not so common as formerly. However, there is yet a great deal of suffering due to carelessness in handling machinery and in neglect of minor infections of the hand.

Dr Copeland

Fingers are sacrificed and, in some cases, even hands are lost, the penalty of neglecting so simple a thing as a pin prick. This great loss cannot be minimized. It brings much misery and suffering, not only to the injured, but to his family, dependent upon him for support.

The hand is so constructed that it contains certain spaces related to the fingers, palm and back of the hand. In these spaces pus can form and accumulate. There are definite anatomical channels through which the pus can spread from one spot to another. By these canals the pus may travel up the arm.

In a case where the danger is unrecognized, where there is neglect of the original infection, the pus may spread so rapidly up the arm as to require immediate amputation. This must be done in order to save the afflicted person's life.

Never neglect an injury to your hands. If it is only a scratch, see that it has proper care. If you prick your finger with a sharp object, be sure that an antiseptic is applied. If after an injury you notice an unusual throbbing of your finger and pain upon motion, please do not delay in seeking proper medical attention.

Do not wait for swelling to occur and if swelling is present, do not rely entirely upon soaking the hand in hot solution. This is a common method of treatment and it may do no more than to mask the actual danger.

Many such cases require surgery. If surgery is performed early, it will be no more than a small incision. If delayed, it may mean a large incision, and frequently more than one operation. Deformity of the hand usually follows multiple operations. That is abundant reason why immediate and skillful treatment should be had.

Infections which come from rusty objects, such as nails, rusty tin or iron implements, are particularly dangerous because of the possibility of tetanus infection. All such injuries should be followed immediately by an injection of tetanus antitoxin. This injection should be given as soon as the injury is received and not after the symptoms of infection have appeared.

Correct Manners

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

The Boy Should Be Thoughtful

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When taking a girl home from a dance—a girl who came alone and who has a separate coat check, as also has the boy—what is the proper thing to do about obtaining the girl's hat and coat and his own? Should he obtain the girl's wraps and help her with them, and then, while she is waiting, obtain his coat? Or should he get both of their wraps and then help her with hers, and put his on later?

2. I received a picture from a girl who has since "given me the air." I do not know why she did, as she will not tell me when I ask her. I do not talk or write to her any more. Would it be proper to send back the picture, or should I just destroy it? L. L. L.

1. The boy who is taking the girl home should be as thoughtful and helpful as possible in seeing that the girl is accompanied to the entrance of the coat-room, where he and she make arrangements as to where they are to meet after he has obtained his hat and coat.

2. Unless she asks for the return of her photograph it wouldn't be gallant or polite of you to return it. It would seem unnecessarily rude. After you have waited a reasonable length of time for her to ask for the return of the photograph you may destroy it, if you do not wish to keep it.

Showing the Right Kind of Appreciation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I met a young man for the first time and he asked me to accompany him to a formal fraternity dance. I accepted. He also sent me flowers. Do you think it proper for me to write him a note of thanks? And what shall I write?

It would be most gracious of you and would show the right kind of appreciation if you were to write a note thanking the young man for his delightful invitation, for the good time that you had at the dance, and for his thoughtfulness in sending you the flowers. He will distinctly like your doing this.

Wearing a Wrist Watch Appropriately.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Recently I had a discussion with a friend of mine over a question of etiquette and we are going to let you decide it. Is it proper to wear a valuable diamond wrist watch to a formal wedding? READERS.

If the wedding is in the day time, a guest would appropriately wear such a watch. If you mean should the bride wear such a watch, I should say no, since it would probably be more in her way, the way of her glove, for instance, than it would be a decoration.

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Perspiring hands give evidence of an impaired, unsteady nervous system. To overcome this trouble it is necessary to cultivate habits of hygiene and health, to get plenty of sleep, plenty of fresh air, plenty of nourishing food. Sponge the palms of the hands with cotton pads that have been dipped in a solution of baking soda. To protect kid gloves sprinkle the inner surfaces with talcum.

Postponing the visit to the dentist is poor policy. Every six months the teeth should have a thorough cleansing to remove tartar that forms at the base and sets up an irritation of the gums. The use of an antiseptic mouth wash should follow the brushing, which sometimes fails to remove debris accumulations of a destructive nature.

Does every sweep of the comb rake out ravelings of tresses that incite you to tears? If so, gird yourself for action since beauty and baldness never walk hand in hand. Every night rub into the scalp a teaspoonful of castor oil and alcohol, equal parts. Spread fingers and thumbs over the scalp and paw briskly, moving the scalp back and forth. The nourishing oil, the heat provided by the alcohol together with friction, will cause the moulting top-crest to turn over a new leaf and thrive.

Household Hints

Turpentine mixed with warm milk will make the oilcloth look like new.

If the boards of your floors do not fit very well, never put a reversible rug directly next to them, as the dust works up through the cracks and causes black lines on the side next to the floor. Cover the floor first with either newspapers or wrapping paper and then lay the rug.

Hardwood floors are very impracticable in either the kitchen or bathroom and should be avoided if possible. These floors must have a covering that will withstand water and be able to endure a good scrubbing, and only a durable flooring, such as linoleum, rubber, cork or fiber can stand the gaff. No matter how pretty it looks, don't be tempted to put hardwood floorings in these two rooms.

LOVED LOBSTERS BUT SUFFERED IF HE ATE THEM

"I like lobsters better than most any food, but I used to suffer when I ate them," says Edward J. Owens, well-known salesman of 86 Falmouth St., Boston, Mass.

"I would have sick headaches; would belch, leaving a sour taste in my mouth; suffered a lot with gas on my stomach.

"I tried many things before my druggist persuaded me to take some Pape's Diapepsin.

"It took me right out of my trouble. I have a better appetite, eat lobsters, pork or anything I want and have no after-effects. I believe in Pape's Diapepsin and recommend it to everyone I know."

If you suffer from indigestion, often or just occasionally, get a package of these candy-like tablets from your druggist. They stop heartburn, gas on stomach, belching, nausea, headaches or any other symptom of indigestion soon as the trouble starts. They are harmless; form no habit; can be taken as often as needed.

PAPE'S DIAPEPSIN

NEW! You can now get Diapepsin in the new, handy size to carry with you at all times. Just ask for the new pocket box.

Fashions in Women .. have changed

IT used to be fashionable to be stupid about money matters. Women especially weren't supposed to understand them. Those who did pretended not to, for it was stylish to get a headache over figures.

But the silly little thing, who was too nice to ask prices a few years ago, is decidedly old-fashioned now. The modern woman takes pride in getting her money's worth.

The fashionable woman of today is a keen, shrewd buyer. She can pick as good a bargain in a grocery store as her husband can in his office. She's in the business of keeping house . . . And, more often than not, she's a steady A & P customer.

That Calamity Jane was the nickname of a gal who carried mail. She also was an aide to Gens. Miles and Custer.

That the late Arnold Bennett coined a now popular expression in show business, viz: "I gotta see a man about a dog." It is in the chapter "Revolution" in "The Old Wives' Tale."

That a ham is best only when it is a year old. But Walter Hampden is certainly much older than that!

Michigan Voting On Death Penalty

DETROIT, April 6.—(AP.)—The question of whether Michigan is to re-establish capital punishment for murder is being decided today by votes of the state. The state has not had the death penalty for any crime except treason for more than 80 years.

The issue before the voters today was placed on the ballot by the Legislature in the form of a referendum on a bill providing death in the electric chair for first degree murder.

Acid Stomach Torture 4 Years. Stops Quick New Way

"I suffered tortures with acid stomach for four years. During the past three weeks I have taken ACIDINE," says William Wilcox of Pasadena, California. "I have gained three pounds. Have had no trouble during this time. I have tried many medicines and all failed to help with the exception of ACIDINE."

ACIDINE is the only known remedy which contains Japtase, that in laboratory tests digests 800 times its weight of certain heavy, starchy foods which cause trouble. It neutralizes burning acids, soothes irritated stomach linings, stops gassy headaches, sleeplessness and nervousness. No other known remedy contains this combination to end acid stomach. ACIDINE also fortifies you against colds by reducing acidity.

Get ACIDINE today at your druggist. Watch how quick acid indigestion, burning stomach, belching, pain, heartburn, dizziness, fullness, short breath, vanish. Eat, drink all you want. Maker refunds money if not delighted.

Catarrhal Deafness May Be Overcome.

If you have catarrhal deafness or head noises go to Max-Leggett's or your druggist and get 1 oz. of Parmint (double strength) and add to it ½ pint of hot water and a little sugar. Take 1 tablespoonful four times a day.

This will often bring quick relief from the distressing head noises. Clogged nostrils should open, breathing become easy and the mucus stop dropping into the throat. It is easy to prepare, costs little and is pleasant to take. Anyone who has catarrhal deafness or head noises should give this prescription a trial.

Safe Blown, Looted in Downtown Theater

6 DEAD, 16 HURT IN AUTO MISHAPS

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH

By William Pfarr

Somebody suggested that we find out how many words have been uttered so far at Henry Oliver Evans' hearing before Council and estimate how many words will be used up before the hearing is ended, if ever. That's too much of a task but we know what the favorite word of the hearing is—interpolate. Councilman English, Councilman Little, and Evans himself all like it, especially Little. English was complaining, at Thursday's hearing, that Chairman Little, known for the moment as Judge Little, allowed some witnesses to interpolate and wouldn't allow others. So Judge Little lifted the ban on interpolations—he said everybody could interpolate, just one grand interpolation party. His Honor promised, whacking his gavel on Council table and looking severely at English.

William Pfarr

The Council hearing is a pretty good show, especially with Little on the bench. He's having a good time. English will criticize Little and His Honor will retort sharply. Then Little will whisper something to English and smile. Director Lang spends most of the time walking up and down beside the long council table, chewing a cigar. Councilman Connelley doesn't say much and Garland is fairly quiet, interrupting now and then to say something in support of Evans. Engineer Reppert is the serious one. In his answers to Evans' questions he speaks slowly and with obvious deliberation. Evans, when he isn't putting a question, is moving here and there whispering to somebody. The spectators' seats are usually filled for each hearing but most of the spectators don't pay much attention. They seem to be waiting for one of the principals to call another a liar, or something; they want fireworks.

The man was supposed to be feeble-minded. He had been brought into Judge Rowand's court to have a guardian appointed for him. Conventional questions to determine his degree of sanity were put to him, but there remained a doubt in the court's mind.

"Do you know," Judge Rowand asked finally, "what I'm supposed to be?"

"Surely," the man answered promptly, "you're supposed to be a judge."

Telephone operators stand pat on all the answers. The company gives them stereotyped replies to all the questions. So there was some excuse for the special operator's reply to us. After she had explained that the West Park Volunteer Fire Department's telephone had been disconnected we volunteered, in our inimitable way, "Well, well! They must not be having any more fires out that way, must they?"

"I'm sorry I can't give you that information," the operator apologized.

Frank McFeaters, of Wilkinsburg, who used to draw things for the Pitt Panther and later for Life and Judge, has formed a new school—the School of Business Depression. Each morning the students are supposed to gather for chapel in an ancient Wilkinsburg theater, which seems the very epitome of depression, and at night there are two meetings, both along the curbs outside convenient drug stores. Mr. McFeaters is the principal lecturer. He advises his admirers to help along the cause of depression, talk about it, encourage people to quit their jobs and starve, sell apples, etc. The tuition: One down-and-out story.

WILL ROGERS SAYS

EL PASO, Tex., April 6.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

Had a great trip in here over the American Airways passenger line. Kelsey, the pilot, has flown 400,000,000 miles without a sign of a mishap. Glad to hear in Los Angeles from the different air lines that the late accident had not interfered with travel.

Will Rogers

My hair turned from gray to white in a taxi going over to Juarez, old Mexico, when a Mexican missed us by inches. Would have given a lot to have been in a plane. Was going to the bull fight. Got my tickets, then saw an old pony that they was going to use in the fight, and I couldn't make it.

Yours, WILL.

BLOW SAFE, HOLD UP STORE

Bandits Break in Theater, Rob Clerk Downtown; Two Flee Shots in East End

While police and detectives were investigating the blowing of a safe in the office of the Ritz Theater, Fifth avenue, early today, a robber held up Hendel's fruit market, Diamond street and McMasters way, a block away. Frank Jannie, of 1334 Vickroy street, attendant in the fruit market, was robbed of $10.

Peter Barlos, watchman in the theater building, discovered that the safe in the balcony office had been blow open. He notified the theater manager, E. C. Masten, and Masten in turn notified the police.

BANDITS SOUGHT

Police also were searching for two bandits who escaped amid a hail of shotgun slugs fired by A. E. Fischer, after they had held up his drug store at 801 East Ohio street. The pair obtained $18 and Fischer's watch valued at $100. As they ran for their automobile, Fischer followed with a shotgun and fired at the automobile. One of the robbers is believed to have been wounded.

The Allegheny Valley was being combed today by county detectives and state police, searching for three men who beat, robbed and kidnapped John Wrona, Harwick grocer, Saturday night. His daughter, Mary, 15, ran to the second floor of the home to hide between $150 and $200. She was overpowered by one of the men who took the money.

As they were leaving the store, the bandit leader decided to take Wrona with them. He was struck on the head with a blackjack and dragged into the machine. Several hours later he was found along the Fox Chapel road and was taken home. He told detectives that during the ride the men debated on whether he should be killed.

COUPLE HELD

North Side police are holding Evaline Thompson, 36, of East Ohio street, and August Young, 39, of Youngstown, O., who police say, were identified by Philip Franz, of 830 Spring Garden avenue, as the pair who held him up at the point of revolvers and robbed him of $170 and jewelry valued at $325 at Lacock and Anderson streets Friday night.

Caught, police say, during the holdup of a sandwich shop at 9 Brady street, early yesterday, R. H. Kline, 25, of 321 Reefer street, and Walter Hirth, 25, of 1465 West Liberty avenue, were being held for questioning today. Patrolman L. C. Bond reported that he found Kline in the rear room holding up Gus Hunaras and Nick Kousella, the proprietors.

A woman and two men, Negroes, held up John Kahn, of 109 Second avenue, Aspinwall, and robbed him of $24 while he was walking in Flavel street, East End, early today.

Mrs. Naomi Connell, of 203 North Sheridan avenue, reported to police that someone entered her apartment during the night and stole $284.

Passengers Steal Trolley Fare Box

When Frank Cunningham, of 13 Margaretta street, a street car motorman, returned to his trolley which had been left for a few minutes in front of the West View car barns, he discovered that two passengers had disappeared, and with them the fare box. Police reported that street car officials had estimated the loss of about $25 in fares in the box.

Foch Decorated As King George Reviewed Troops

In yesterday's instalment Marshal Foch told of the grave crisis that threatened the Allies late in October and early in November, 1914, when the Germans held the greater part of Belgium and were driving forward to capture the Channel ports.

Marshal Foch had been sent to that front by Marshal Joffre to help co-ordinate the Allied forces in their resistance. The British forces were sorely pressed. There had been a break in the British line that threatened to open the road to Ypres to the Germans. The First British Corps was in retreat toward Ypres and Marshal French, the British commander, had a dismal view of the situation, which seemed likely to develop into a great disaster.

Marshal Foch told how, at this juncture, he urged Marshal French to halt the retreat at all costs, make a determined stand, and took steps to solidify the defense and make counter-attacks by French troops that would relieve the pressure on the British First Corps. This was done and the German advance in Belgium was blocked.

By MARSHAL FERDINAND FOCH

Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Armies During the Closing Phases of the World War.

CHAPTER IX.

The Allied operations in Flanders lasted a long time, covered a wide extent of territory, were carried on by a heterogeneous collection of troops, insufficient in number, always slow in arriving and quickly intermingled. Under conditions as complicated as these, success would have been impossible without a unity of direction which enabled this confused and difficult battle to be embraced in its general outlines and the real situation cleared to the view.

To this factor should be added the services rendered by a most efficient liaison between the Allied combatants as well as between the commander of their units, which was only another manifestation of that spirit of co-operation and comradeship in arms which was long to constitute a bond of friendship between the Allied nations.

Probably never before had the motto of our British allies: "Union fait la force," found a more happy and complete application than in this wholehearted co-operation. What a union of wills, each aiding and inspiring the other and all giving of themselves without stint, did this battle in common about!

Marshal Foch

Here, without any doubt, is to be found the explanation of that marvelous improvised defense which resisted to a victorious finish a formidable attack powerfully mounted and doggedly repeated for almost an entire month.

I had, of course, remained in close touch with my commander-in-chief, Joffre. Although I had not seen him since November 2, we had exchanged views daily. While he never failed to recognize the importance of the operations in Flanders, he was not able to immediately assign to them all the forces they demanded.

His armies were greatly fatigued by two months of heavy fighting, they lacked ammunition, and moreover, he was forced to provide for the security of a front which as yet was only poorly organized and whose length had rapidly increased until now it reached from the Vosges to the Lys, a distance of 375 miles.

On such an extent of front, where both sides were everywhere in close contact, a surprise was possible at nearly every point. These facts furnish the reason for the more or less piecemeal arrival of reinforcements for the battle of Ypres; they also explain why the troops which had started the battle had to be kept in action for so long a time.

The reason was simple—there were no others to take their place! But they proved themselves equal to every call made upon their gallantry during the whole of the bitter struggle. Two examples of many will serve as illustrations:

Strong Resistance

The British I Corps had suffered heavily since October 31, and on that day it had been started in retreat; but it halted, went back into battle with renewed ardor, sustained repeated heavy attacks and only left the battlefield finally on November 18, when the enemy had been definitely stopped.

The French IX Corps, the 42nd French Division and the Cavalry Corps were engaged without intermission, from October 23 to November 15, and they were relieved only several days later.

What unshakable tenacity was required by efforts such as these and made at the price of what fatigue!

The battle of Ypres extended along a front of 28 miles, from Nordschoote to the Lys at Armentieres. The Germans employed the equivalent of 15 corps; the Allies 10. On October 31 the French held about 15½ miles of the front, the British 12½; on November 5 the French held 18½ miles, and the British 9½.

It can be seen that the French troops, both as to length of front

Beauty Expert Lectures To Pittsburgh Women On Makeup Art

Pittsburgh women are being told about "The Art of Make-Up" by V. E. Meadows, international authority on beauty and cosmetician to famous movie and stage stars. He made his first talk today at 2:30 in Pirate Hall, William Penn Hotel.

The Sun-Telegraph has arranged for Mr. Meadows to give nine free lectures this week. Every afternoon, including Friday, at 2:30 in Pirate Hall, William Penn Hotel; at 5:15 today and tomorrow at the Penn Theater, and every evening except Friday at 8 p. m. in the Fort Pitt Hotel the man who has made Hollywood beauties more beautiful will lecture to Pittsburgh women on the technique of make-up. Each lecture will be illustrated with living models.

Tickets may be obtained by calling Miss Grey at Grant 6500. Mr. Meadows said today:

"Beauty doesn't come from magic. It demands hard work. There is no substitute for daily brushing of the hair, care of the skin and nails. Cleanliness, inside and out, is the first essential."

The American girl is changing from the faddish, freakish type of a few years ago to her own sweet self, according to Dr. Meadows. He said:

"Her makeup is gradually becoming less apparent. An attempted exoticism is being discarded in favor of a sweet, clean, fresh look."

Mr. Meadows, in the past 20 years, has cared for the complexions of most of America's famous women on the stage and screen. His latest charge is Irene Delroy. He picked Esther Ralston as a lovely type of blonde and Lupe Velez as a most dynamic "olivette."

2 ON CYCLE KILLED IN COLLISION

Carrick School Teacher Hurt Fatally Near Brookville; Hit-Run Victim Succumbs

Four men were killed and 16 persons injured in Easter automobile accidents in the Pittsburgh district. A Carrick school teacher on an Easter holiday trip was injured fatally in an accident near Brookville, Pa., and a sixth victim, a Braddock policeman, died from injuries suffered March 26.

When their motorcycle struck an automobile in Mt. Troy road, Joseph G. Simon, 20, of Mt. Troy road, Reserve Township, and Jacob Paul, 20, of R. D. No. 4, Millvale, were killed last night. They were pronounced dead when admitted to the Allegheny General Hospital. Both had suffered a fractured skull.

James F. Kelly, 35, of 1137 Murrayhill avenue, was killed when an automobile in which he was riding with Michael Murphy, 38, of 201 South Craig street, struck an iron pole in Shady avenue near Fair Oaks street, early yesterday. Murphy, critically injured, is in the Pittsburgh Hospital. The driver, A. M. Stillwell, 35, of 5429 Walnut street, was cut and bruised. He was turned over to the homicide squad after City Physician William H. Evans had declared him to be under the influence of liquor, police reported.

HIT-RUN VICTIM DIES

A victim of a hit-run motorist, Egnoetz Saratovnow, 45, of Adderly, died yesterday in the Braddock General Hospital. He was struck by an automobile on the Pitcairn-Wilkinsburg road several hours before.

Miss Annabelle Hutson, 21, of New Bethlehem, a teacher in the Carrick Public School, died in a hospital at Brooksville yesterday from injuries suffered late Saturday night when the automobile of her escort overturned. Her companion, Francis Ketley, 22, of Clarion, was confined to the hospital. The two were found unconscious beside the overturned machine near Brookville.

Patrolman John Podowski, of 812 Washington street, Braddock, died yesterday in the Braddock General Hospital. He was struck by an automobile while on duty March 26.

An alleged hit-run motorist who left a man and woman lying in Carson street at Twentieth street after his machine had struck them was captured after a chase of more than four miles through the South Side to Hays early today. The man, held at the South Side Station, said he was James E. Jackson, 65, Negro, of Chicago.

CAPTURED IN CHASE

The injured are John J. Daley, 66, of 2814 Carson street, and Mrs. Bridget McEldowney, 46, of 2728 Carson street. They are confined to St. Joseph's Hospital suffering severe body bruises. Rudolph Wuchenich, 21, of 2832 Carson street, who witnessed the accident, commandeered the automobile of S. A. Wuenstel, of 2931 Sacramento street, and followed Jackson's car to Hays, where they forced Jackson to stop and then drive back to the South Side Police Station.

Robert Dempster, 21, of 605 Boyd street, Carnegie, and Carl Mascellino, 21, of 24 Bank street, Carnegie, were confined to their homes today with injuries suffered when struck by an automobile which, police declared, ran onto the sidewalk at Washington and Trimble avenues, Carnegie, yesterday. Rex, a German police dog, owned by Dempster, was killed. Carnegie police reported arresting Bernard Srogi, 22, of 186 Steuben street, as the driver of the car.

Injured seriously when struck by an automobile on the South Twenty-second Street Bridge last night, Andrew Kraus, 7, of 1912 Shamokin street, was in St. Joseph's Hospital. Police said the machine was driven by James Lamb, 24, of 315 Meyran avenue.

Hospital Seeks Identity Of Girl Found in Coma

The identity of a well-dressed woman, about 22, found unconscious early yesterday in the women's rest room of the Pennsylvania Railroad Station, was being sought by Allegheny General Hospital authorities today.

The woman had not regained consciousness early today—24 hours after she had been found. Suffering from a form of sleeping sickness, the victim had nothing in her effects to establish identity.

A broadcast over the police teletype system described her as five feet tall, weight 100 pounds, blue eyes, brown hair with only 11 of her natural teeth. She was dressed in a black winter coat, trimmed with fur, black straw hat, dark green dress, black snakeskin-trimmed shoes with purse to match and a lavender and white scarf.

Life interest in real estate, valued at $45,000, and personal property, valued at $35,000, were left to his widow, Mrs. Ella O'Connor. The will stipulated that in the event of the death of Mrs. O'Connor the real estate was to be left to the son.

JOB INSURANCE ADVOCATED

A successful remedy for business depression can alone be formed by joint action of industry, government and social agencies, it is agreed by an economist, a public utility executive and a housing expert. The views of the three men are given in articles they have written for the Pittsburgh "Record," a bi-monthly publication of the University of Pittsburgh.

The men who gave their views are Dr. Francis D. Tyson, University of Pittsburgh economics professor; Frank J. Chesterman, general manager of the Bell Telephone Company, and John Ihlder, executive director of the Pittsburgh Housing Association. Chesterman advocated unemployment insurance to be financed by portions of laborers' earnings, together with portions of capital's earnings during boom periods.

Dr. Tyson warned of a complete realignment in American political life if the laboring and small salaried groups are required to bear in great measure the cost of economic maladjustment that results from failure to keep production and consumption in balance.

Ihlder indorsed the Pittsburgh plan for labor stabilization as advanced by the Allegheny County Emergency Association.

The afternoon session will be in charge of P. M. Farmer, past president. During the war, Farmer served on the committee of welding for the Emergency Fleet Corporation and is past president of the American Welding Society.

HITS CONDITION OF STOLEN CAR

A 15-year-old boy, who police at the Carrick station say, was caught in an alleged attempt to steal an automobile, has voiced his complaint against the condition of the machine which he selected to "borrow." The boy is said to have been caught when the machine he was removing from a garage in Brownsville avenue, struck a wall. He said the brakes were faulty.

At the police station the youth is said to have told police:

"I can't understand why the owner of that car isn't arrested. It has a sticker on the windshield, saying that it has been inspected by the state, and yet the brakes are no good. There's something rotten somewhere."

Because of his youth, the police will not publish the boy's name.

A sick spell is always bad enough, but its after-effects are often worse. If your child has been sick recently, now is the dangerous time.

Resistance is at a low ebb, vitality is lowered, and your child does not have the reserve strength to resist infection.

For over 75 years Father John's Medicine has proved its worth as a body builder, as a tonic for weak, run-down children, as an aid to healthy vigor.

It supplies in easily assimilated form the food elements your child vitally needs and which are missing from so many modern diets. Pale, half-sick children pick right up. Weight is added, strength returns.

Father John's Medicine is a combination of valuable ingredients, none of which cold harm an infant. It contains no alcohol or drugs. Because of its scientific preparation it brings to your child all the benefits of cod liver oil in its finest form. It is rich in vitamins. Children thrive on it amazingly. And they love to take it, because it tastes good.

Over 184 hospitals and institutions use it regularly. Countless mothers are never without it. Just ask your druggist.

DUNN TO LEAD ROONEY FOES

Thomas A. Dunn, first vice president of the Pittsburgh Chamber of Commerce, will head the chamber's delegation which will attend a hearing on the Root and Rooney bills at Harrisburg tomorrow afternoon. They will oppose passage of the bills. This will be the third time within 10 years that Mr. Dunn has headed delegations opposing efforts to change the present appointive Board of Education.

Turnkey at Home, Prisoner Saws Way Out

PAXTON, Ill., April 6.—(AP.)—Fred Dawn, 25, New Haven, Ky., calmly sawed his way out of the Ford County jail here yesterday while the turnkey spent the afternoon at his home across the street.

Eight other prisoners, who refused to follow Dawn, succeeded in attracting the attention of children playing on a nearby lawn and sent one of them for the turnkey. Charles Crowe, who then launched the search.

ROSS, TURFMAN, REMARRIES

MONTREAL, April 6.—(AP.)—A cablegram to the Gazette, from Kingston, Jamaica, reported the marriage there, last Tuesday, of Commander J. K. L. Ross, famous turfman, to Miss Iris Delisser, daughter of a Jamaican planter.

Commander Ross and his first wife, Ethel, were divorced a few weeks ago, in Reno, where the first Mrs. Ross remained to be secretly married, March 17, to Guy Murchie, Boston attorney.

Canon Stokes Guest Of Cathedral Group

Members of the Pittsburgh committee of the National Cathedral Association will hear reports on Wednesday, April 8, of the latest progress in the building of the cathedral at Mount Saint Alban. Mr. and Mrs. Edmund W. Mudge, of 1000 Morewood avenue, have issued invitations for a reception in honor of the Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, D. D., canon of Washington Cathedral; Edwin N. Lewis, editor of the Cathedral Age, and the members of the local committee. Canon Stokes will deliver an illustrated lecture on outstanding developments in the cathedral enterprise.

Hint Clues to Free Beauty in Slaying

NICE, France, April 6.—(AP.)—Residents in the American colony here said that attorneys for Charlotte Nixon-Nirdlinger have discovered new evidence which they plan to use in an attempt to obtain their client's liberty without a jury trial on a charge of killing her husband.

These unconfirmed reports said the new evidence was of such a nature as to make possible the intervention of United States officials. The courts, meanwhile, plan to bring the woman to trial early next month.

Admits Theft From Woman At Prayer

After admitting that he stole the purse of Mrs. Anna Orabitz, of Pitcairn place, while she knelt at prayer in the Epiphany Church yesterday morning, John Ryan, 58, was held for court today by Magistrate Leo Rothenberg.

The theft was observed by two ushers, who escorted Ryan from the church, police said. Outside he escaped and was captured after a chase by a patrolman.

BLACKMAILERS AVOID TRAP

Blackmailers who sent threatening letters to Andrew Blazek, a butcher, of 8326 Frankstown avenue, demanding $500 and signed themselves as "The Chiselers," were being sought by police today.

Blazek informed police Saturday night of the letters which commanded him to place the money in a coal tipple at the head of Standard avenue. Saturday midnight. Blazek was there with a decoy package and so were East End police, but the "Chiselers" failed to show up.

BROTHERHOOD OFFICIAL DUE IN CITY

Will Confer With 3 Local Branches in Attempt To Prevent Cab Strike

Pittsburgh taxicab drivers, who Friday voted to strike, today awaited arrival of a representative of Daniel J. Tobin, president of the International Brotherhood of Chauffeurs, Teamsters, Stablemen and Helpers, before deciding their next move. The representative was expected today or tomorrow.

It is expected a conference with officials of the Parmelee Transportation Company, owners of the cab service here, will be sought by the union leaders in the hope of averting a strike.

Immediately upon his arrival the international official will meet with 21 directors of the three local branches of the union. The meeting with the company officials will be sought after this conference.

Fred Schaffer, business agent for the taxicab drivers' union, said today, his wife, Mrs. Virginia Schaffer, received a telephone call Saturday threatening his life if he sanctioned a strike of the drivers. The voice on the telephone identified herself only as the wife of a cab-driver, Schaffer said.

Union leaders complain that the company is discharging union drivers without cause, and replacing them with nonunion men. Officials deny this, but decline to make further statements.

Fred Shaffer, business agent of the union, today asked that all former drivers of the company communicate with the union headquarters at 527 Fifth avenue. Efforts to reach these men have been hampered by many of them changing their addresses.

Easter Church Services Attended by Society

Everyone who was in town for Easter went to church yesterday, with men and women in their best bibs and tuckers and boys and girls, too. In spite of the penetrating chill of Easter breezes many folks braved the cold, and appeared in new spring attire.

Many smart coats in darker tones with striking collars of white galyak, hats of every sort, and shoulder corsages with orchids to the fore, I noticed, and smart suits galore. Black and white and brown and white and vivid navy blues were the favored colors yesterday for suits and coats.

The members of the congregation of the East Liberty Presbyterian Church attended the final Easter service in the present building. Prominent among the arrivals for the service yesterday were the Richard Beatty Mellons with Mrs. Mellon wearing a pirate blue crepe dress, a black coat and a black bangkok hat.

* * *

Louise Evans, daughter of the Henry Oliver Evanses, whom I saw leaving the Third Presbyterian Church with her brother, Oliver Evans, was smart in a trim navy blue suit and a shiny straw hat. And she wore a spray of orchids.

Orchids Popular

Delightfully colorful was the congregation at Shadyside Presbyterian Church. Among those chatting with friends upon leaving church were the junior William Larimer Mellons, who were chatting with Mrs. Matthew Taylor. Mrs. Mellon wore a red cloth coat having a collar of beige fox and a red hat. Mrs. J. Henry O'Neil chose a severely tailored navy blue tweed coat with a notched velvet collar and a navy straw hat. She wore orchids, too.

Chatting with the Theodore F. Smiths were the Herbert A. Mays, with Mrs. May wearing a black coat having a deep collar of white galyak and a navy blue straw hat. Mrs. Smith chose a smart suit in navy blue, and both had corsages.

Virginia Furey was there, and young Nancy Atkinson Darsie, who was with her mother, Mrs. John A. Darsie, of Plainfield, N. J. The Darsies are the guests of Mr. Darsie's father, T. D. Darsie, of Fifth avenue and Woodland road.

Dr. and Mrs. Paul Benjamin Ernst were there, C. C. Moreland, Mary Louise Miller and ever so many others.

* * *

At Calvary Episcopal Church I saw Margaret Brill, a deb of the past season, in a smart spring suit, and Maj. and Mrs. Reginald McDonald, with Mrs. McDonald in a frock of black crepe with a black coat and hat. I caught a glimpse of Frances Forsyth, wearing a suit of beige tweed, with a hat of beige straw.

Suits Smart

The Reginald G. Qualles I saw, too, with Mrs. Qualle in black with a smart cloche of rough black straw. And Mary Shiras, very attractive in a spring suit of black broadcloth, with a smart hat of rough black straw with touches of white, and wearing a corsage of white roses, was with her fiance, Carl Adams Dietrich, of Detroit. I saw Mrs. Elizabeth Vermorcken among the promenaders, too.

Marjorie Kimball, who was chatting with some folks after the service, wore a black ensemble, with a black straw Watteau hat. The Paul Havilands I saw, too, and Nancy Brown. Mrs. Taylor Allderdice wore a smart frock of black crepe with panels of rose crepe inset in the skirt, and a black coat and hat. Helen Leovy was there with her father, Frank Adair Leovy, and her sister and brother-in-law, the Clarence Stanleys, and Helen wore a black ensemble with a smart hat of the popular rough black straw.

Mrs. T. Howe Nimick wore a frock of royal blue crepe with a black coat and matching straw hat.

Dr. and Mrs. Joseph M. Reed, of Summerlea street, announce the marriage of their daughter, Anne, to William H. Hubner, son of the William Hubners, of Aylesboro avenue and Wauchula, Fla., which took place Saturday evening at 8 o'clock in the Reed home. Officiating was the Rev. L. Norman Tucker, of St. James Episcopal Church; Mrs. William P. Blackburn, Jr., was her sister's matron of honor, and serving as best man was Albert Kanover, of Chicago. A. Hamilton Cline III played the wedding music. Only the immediate families were present.

Announce Marriage

There was a dinner and reception in the University Club later, after which the Hubners left for a wedding trip to Florida and Havana, Cuba. They will make their home in Chicago.

The bride attended Wellesley College and is a graduate of the University of Pittsburgh. The bridegroom is a graduate of the University of Pittsburgh and received his master's degree at the University of Michigan. He is a member of Phi Gamma Delta.

Mothers to Be Given Day Of Rest by Scouts

Girl Scouts are going to give their mothers a practical and decidedly worth while Mothers' Day this year. The national organization has suggested to the quarter of a million Scouts that they make of May 10 a day of rest and recreation for their mothers. Mrs. Ida Bailey Allen, president of the National Radio Homemakers' Club, will give a Girl Scout menu for a Mothers' Day dinner during her radio chat at 10 o'clock Thursday, May 7, over a national hookup.

Among the suggestions made to the girls is that they give their mothers small gifts, that they gather flowers from their own gardens wherever this is possible and that they act as hostesses in their own homes to their elders that day.

Suggestions for the afternoon include tea parties in troop meeting places or in the homes of the girls.

The Twentieth Ward League of Women Voters will conduct a tour of the Courthouse on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, with Mrs. Kenneth Gould in charge. Miss Bessie Kann will speak on "Courts" before the Twenty-third Ward league on Wednesday evening, in the Latimer Junior High School.

Voters' Meetings

A benefit card party will be held by the Twenty-sixth Ward league on Wednesday evening, in the American Legion rooms, Perrysville avenue. Mrs. Blanche Neely is chairman and has as her assistants Mrs. H. N. Bernhart, Mrs. J. A. Kern and Mrs. Elmer Kenneweg.

Mrs. William J. Swoger is to be hostess to the Rosedale league on Thursday afternoon, at her home in Verona road. A round table discussion on "The Legal Status of Women" will be the program feature.

Plans are going ahead for the annual benefit bridge of the Allegheny County league to be held on Saturday afternoon, April 18, in the William Penn Hotel. Mrs. O. G. Butts, general chairman, has appointed the following chairmen to assist her: Mrs. F. O. Graham and Mrs. C. H. Ingram, tickets; Mrs. Frank Bond, candy; Mrs. John Collins, publicity; Mrs. H. D. Stark and Mrs. W. A. Thompson, prizes; Mrs. R. B. Savage, novelties and aprons, and Mrs. H. K. Griffin and Mrs. R. B. Stone, aides and cards.

* * *

Mrs. A. D. Elliott will lead the program to be presented tomorrow evening at the Duquesne Civic Club's meeting. Miss Margaret Herrington will sing, Jack Allen will present a sketch featuring Russel Manor, Robert Wright and Harry Bowen; the dramatic department will give a one-act comedy and Judge Paulson D. Foster, of Juvenile Court, will speak concerning the work of the court.

* * *

A springtime program is featuring today's meeting of the Woman's Club of Wilkinsburg in the Y. W. C. A. auditorium. Edmund W. Arthur is speaking on "Nature" and Alice Long, soprano, is contributing spring songs.

The drama department of the club will meet for its final session of the year on Tuesday afternoon, April 14, in the "Y," and Mrs. Albert J. Dawson's group will have charge of the program. George William Smith, of Carnegie Tech Schoool of Drama, will give a talk on the drama and will read a play

STYLIST SHOWS LATEST CREATION IN ENSEMBLES

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, April 6.—You won't know our old friend the ensemble in its new spring guise. It is certainly quite a different affair from the ensemle that was popularized to death last year. The matching coat and frock became a rather monotonous costume when it appeared anywhere and everywhere. Any variety and charm it had was utterly lost because of increasing duplication. But there will be no reason to level such a charge against the new ensembles. For color is the principal tie-up now.

* * *

FOR INSTANCE, a coat of blue woolen is worn with a silk print which combines white with the matching tone of blue, thus creating a most subtle ensemble link. We think that the infinite possibilities of this idea will commend themselves to most women, and particularly those who vowed never to own another ensemble costume again. These ensembles are being strongly featured by leading couturiers here and on your side of the ocean and of course will also be used by the copyists for less expensive adaptions.

* * *

THE SKETCHES of the new type ensemble shown on this page should give one a definite, if not a very graphic idea, of the new ensemble, but a description should remedy that. The coat is of cafe-au-lait shade in a loosely woven woolen and the flaring sleeves and scarf ends are bordered in blue fox. Set in pieces at the side and back are shaped to a close hip line with a slight flare below. The coat blouses slightly over a narrow belt of the material. The dress is of plain and dotted crepe de chine in shades of cafe-au-lait and dark brown, the former tone providing the color hook-up. Three sizes and treatments of the dotted motif lend interest to the severely simple lines of the frock. Again, the narrow belt hipline and slightly flaring skirt are remarked in this Premet model.

BRITISH RULER VIEWS TROOPS AFTER BATTLE

occupied and numbers engaged, had to sustain the major part of the battle. It would, therefore, be contrary to the truth to speak of the battle and victory of Ypres as exclusively British.

On both sides the losses were very heavy. In order to overcome our resistance, the Germans had brought into action heavy artillery much more powerful than any possessed by the Allies, comprising as it did many very big guns, some even of 15-inch caliber.

The German units composed of reservists were especially ardent, but they were surprised and bewildered by the tenacity shown by their opponents. These troops were pushed, amid noise and shouting, into violent assaults in close formation, resulting in veritable hecatombs. Their morale thereby suffered greatly.

Overcome Difficulties

By a continuous development of the outflanking maneuver which we had undertaken a few days after the victory of the Marne, we had been led to extend our front from Switzerland to the North Sea. This was a distance of 425 miles—a line of battle hitherto unheard of in history. Moreover, six weeks after the Marne we had been obliged to improvise a new battle—and a decisive one—on the northern extremity of this front.

The outcome of such an encounter was, naturally, subject at first to the gravest misgiving, when one took into account the enormous reserves in men and material which the enemy had prepared and organized in time of peace, and which gave him from the start a redoubtable advantage. Faced by a shortage in men, a greater shortage in material and a still greater shortage in ammunition, obliged to improvise an organization for our own force as well as one which would embrace those of our Allies—such were the conditions under which we approached this encounter.

By the united efforts of all every difficulty was surmounted; but the outcome was mostly due to the vigilance and resolution of the French Commander-in-Chief, who did not hesitate to man with his own troops the greater portion of the Allied front.

The result was considerable. The definite check which the Allied Armies inflicted upon the enemy on the banks of the Yser and at Ypres, frustrated his plan of defeating us first and attacking Russia afterwards; it guarded from invasion and occupation the particularly rich provinces of Northern France; it saved the Channel ports and those of the North Sea, that is to say, the communications between France and England; it protected England from German attacks; it preserved for Belgium a scrap of territory that maintained for her a place upon the map of Europe, and placed her government beyond the reach of the enemy.

Attacks More Violent

The Allied armies had shared in a battle which had lasted for more than a month, and their close co-operation had brought about a victory. It was not possible that blood shed in common under such circumstances could fail to cement the friendship of the three nations. That alone constituted a big asset in the balance sheet of the coalition.

The Germans had compensated themselves for their defeat by redoubling in violence the bombardment of Ypres. On November 22, they took St. Peter's Cathedral and the Cloth Hall as targets for their incendiary shells. These magnificent monuments soon became a mere pile of lamentable ruins.

The fighting around Ypres once more proved the strength which the defense had acquired through the development of fire-power, and especially that of machine guns. The offensive had not gained in any similar proportion.

Out of the situation, there arose that long period of stagnation of the two opposing armies during which a new sort of warfare came into existence, the war of position, as opposed to the so-called war of movement. It was really nothing but a temporary crisis in the business of war, an acknowledgment of helplessness which grew out of the fact that the offensive, armed with fairly satisfactory weapons, was powerless to get the better of the defensive, having at its disposal superior means of action.

There seems no limit to what may be expected in future struggles from the progress of aviation and the development of chemical warfare. Consequently, in making preparations for the next war, we must not fail to first take into account the varied and formidable material which will be employed in battle, provide a part of it, at least, during peace time and create a military organization which will assure its proper use in time of war.

Decorated by King

Like Lord Kitchener, whose anxiety on November 1 I have described, the British people had followed with apprehension this long battle of Ypres, which threatened to carry the war into their island. Its result had been for them a real relief, and the King crossed the channel to express his satisfaction to his army.

On December 2nd, accompanied by Gens. d'Urbal, de Maud'Huy, Conneau, de Mitry, Crossetti and Maistre, and by some of my staff, I went to meet him by appointment at Saint Omer. Sir John French had fully explained to him the events which had taken place, and he took me apart to thank me.

He expressed in the kindest way his appreciation of what I had done for his army and the powerful and continual support I had given his troops and which had assured for us the great results of the battle of Ypres.

In my turn, I congratulated him upon the gallantry of his army which, subjected to most violent assaults, had stubbornly held its ground for over three weeks.

The King terminated my visit by bestowing upon me the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, which he had desired to bring me, although, as he said, this dignity was of a higher grade than was appropriate to my present functions. He then received and decorated the French generals.

Our relations with the British Army, which were already very frank and cordial, had grown even closer during the battle which we had fought together and gained by our entire and perfect union.

This stout friendship which marked the battlefield of Ypres had spread to the two nations, as the King had just made evident. As the war went on, it became stronger and stronger, until at last our common victory crowned it. Its maintenance will for a long time be a guarantee of the world peace.

LORD ROBERTS

Died at Front

A Visit From Lord Roberts

Marshal Foch in his War Memoirs gives this interesting account of the visit paid to him by Field Marshal Earl Roberts, famous British military leader and Boer War hero, during the height of the fighting in Flanders:

On November 13, 1914, Field Marshal Earl Roberts came to see me at my headquarters at Cassel, accompanied by his daughter, Lady Edwina Roberts. He was a fine figure of a soldier and patriot, a great Englishman in the widest sense of the word. Notwithstanding his age, which was then more than 80, he was still wonderfully active and in full possession of all his faculties.

I had known him for several years and had always been filled with admiration for the clearness of his vision and the greatness and uprightness of his character. I had realized this in 1912 when, moved by a profound anxiety, he had made those speeches in which he urged upon his countrymen, then asleep in comfortable dreams of peace, the necessity of obligatory military service.

For over an hour we talked of the battle. I showed him our maps, on which were marked up daily the successive moves of our troops, the positions won and lost.

This was the last time I was destined to see him. At 2 o'clock he left us and went over to visit the Indian troops, for whom he always had retained an especial attachment. They had just come out of a severe battle and were being given a rest.

Confident in his seemingly inexhaustible youth, and braving the rigors of the season, he took off his overcoat in order to pass them in review. In this way he caught a chill which obliged him to take to his bed on returning to St. Omer in the evening. On the following day he died. It was an end well worthy of his glorious past.

All In A Day

By Mark Hellinger

A BROADWAY CYNIC is a good guy to know. To hear him tell it, he is a bird who knows everything and believes nothing. When the Broadway cynic is a man, he laughs at everybody's troubles—and cries at his own. When the cynic is a woman, she's generally a gal who tells you she hates both marriage and children. She then falls in love, gets married—and has twins.

I love to talk to wiseacres, which is Broadwayese for cynics. They're all so completely phoney. The big merchants who publish opinions on expert advertising routines they have created—and pay some poor guy 50 bucks a week to write the stuff for them. The great producers who scream for Art in the theater—and make fortunes out of sexy exhibits. Lord, there are so very many of these types!

It is in a discussion of love, however, that the wiseacres stand supreme. They know exactly how a man or woman will act under certain circumstances. The male wiseacre is certain to tell you that all women are pretty bad.

"Ah," he will tell you, "she's different."

Sure. There's always one who is different. As long as I live, I will never forget the case of a celebrated Broadway actor who was in love with a little stage lady for three long years. He would have been more than happy to marry her. Only one thing stood in the way. His wife, who wouldn't give him a divorce, would have raised some strenuous objections.

Everybody on Broadway liked this actor. Most of us still do. He had but one fault—and that wasn't a particularly serious one unless it concerned you. If your girl or wife would suddenly step out on you, the actor would enjoy himself immensely. There was some strange quirk in his nature that made him taunt an unhappy lover.

"You poor sap," he would cry. "It serves you right. What did you want to fall in love with a girl like that for in the first place? Cheer up, my friend. I don't think she was much good, anyhow."

And then, while his friend was feeling lower and lower, the actor would move among his pals and spread the glad tidings.

"Hear about Al?" he would cry. "He got the old Broadway run-around again. His dame, of course. They're all alike. Some guy offered her a screen test and she never even kissed Al goodbye. Well, that's what a man gets for falling too deeply in love."

One morning, around 4 o'clock, I ran across this wiseacre in a cabaret that held but few patrons. His eyes were red and were hanging from their sockets. He was dirty and unshaven. He was as drunk as a college freshman who has sniffed the cork of a bottle of brandy.

A piano player, with the instrument right beside the actor's table, was playing "Melancholy Baby," and singing it over and over again. The actor did nothing but sit and stare into vacancy.

I slipped into the chair beside him.

"What's the matter, Frank?" I asked him.

He turned listless eyes upon me.

"My girl is gone," he replied hopelessly. "After three years she's left me for somebody else. I quit my show tonight. I can't work.

"She says she's never coming back to me. God, Mark, nobody will ever know how I'm suffering. Nobody."

I sympathized with him and tried to comfort him. But, inwardly, I was laughing a hard laugh. He had gone the way of all wiseacres who are just a little too wise . . .

* * *

Ever have anyone tell you that nobody ever died of a broken heart? I have—many times. And when I quote actual cases—such as Pauline Armitage and Dorothy Smollar and Mary Lygo—I get a wave of the hand and a gentle snicker.

"Don't give us that" they tell me. "You're a sob sister and it's your business to give the public stories like that. They're probably average deaths, colored and served up by you as heartbreaks. Stop kidding us, Marko. We know you."

That's all right with me. I don't mind the raps because when nobody raps—nobody's interested. But nobody can tell me about such a case as the Mary Lygo affair. I know it too well.

Mary was in the Follies in 1920. She was a brunette. Pretty. Quiet. Unassuming. Never caring very much for publicity. Unusual.

When the Follies played Pittsburgh, Mary—born Irene Goodall—met Gorden Thorne, gentleman of money and leisure. She fell for him in beautiful fashion. He had a wife, of course. What's a story like this without a wife?

After six months—not bad for a romance of this type—Thorne and Mary had an argument. Mary attempted to kill herself. But the attempt was unsuccessful and the papers kidded the chorine. They printed enough, however, to have Mrs. Thorne sue for divorce. She won her case and the way was now open to have Miss Lygo become Mrs. Thorne.

But Thorne began to back out. After all, as some wise man once said, what is a Thorne without a badge? Once more Mary attempted suicide and once more she was unsuccessful. And once more, you may be sure, the papers kidded her gently.

To forget, Mary went to Hollywood. That's a bad place for anyone to attempt to forget love. After a hard struggle, she gave it up a third time and drank a cup of poison.

This time nobody laughed. She was dead. It was the poison that killed her, of course. But it was nothing more than the old heart trouble that brought on the poison.

Remember Jessie Reed and Danny Caswell? I guess you do for the simple reason that it was one of Broadway's most famous romances. Back in 1920, Jessie was the most beautiful of all of the Ziegfeld girls. Caswell had plenty of money at the time and when he fell in love with Jessie she became his wife.

For a short time they were fairly happy. Dan gave his wife money, jewels and affection. But Jessie drifted away. Perhaps she had definite reasons. And perhaps she had never loved him particularly.

Caswell never got over that jilt. He died a few months later.

Sometimes this love business gets so complicated that one goes a little daffy trying to figure it all out. That famous case, for instance, that involved Evelyn Laye, Jessie Matthews and Sonny Hale.

Miss Laye and Miss Matthews, although totally different types, are two very beautful women. I saw this Sonny Hale gentleman in a show in London and he didn't look like any prize package to me. Maybe I didn't watch him at the proper angle.

Regardless of that, though, Miss Laye and Miss Matthews were both very much in love with Sonny. Miss Laye had the prior right inasmuch as she was the gentleman's authorized wife. But that didn't prevent Jessie from stepping into the picture. Maybe Sonny Hale, something like Nathan Hale, regretted that he had but one wife to give to his country.

After discovering the great love between her husband and Miss Matthews, Evelyn did a rare thing. Although she has never admitted it, it is generally understood that she secured a divorce so that Sonny might marry Jessie. And that's exactly what happened.

About 10 years ago, Walter Lewisohn was 36 years of age. A millionaire member of a great banking firm, he spent money like he had a share in the mint. His parties were the talk of Broadway. Everything was going very nicely with him until he fell in love with a grand little dancer named Leonora Hughes.

Leonora, so far as I know, never encouraged the banker to any great extent. That, possibly, is what preyed on his mind. For they wrapped him up one spring morning and tucked him away in a Connecticut sanitarium.

Today Lewisohn is still a habitant of that spot. His mind is broken and he is kept behind locked doors. He has but one joy in life. And that is a little prop telephone, connected with nowhere.

In front of that phoney phone Lewisohn has been sitting since they took him from Broadway. When I told the story about four years ago it was thought that his condition might improve and that he might forget the woman with whom he was so madly in love. But that hasn't happened.

Morning, noon and night the former banker babbles into the instrument. He thinks he is talking to Leonora Hughes. He cries, he motions, he chuckles and he sobs. And all the while, down in South America, Leonora is happily married to another man and is busily engaged in raising children.

Oh, well. Every cloud has a silver lining. By being in his mental state, Lewisohn missed the Wall Street crash. Maybe he's better off at that . . .

One of my favorite stories is the one about the actor whose wife died suddenly. A friend of his, unable to attend the funeral, visited the actor at his home a few days after. The Thespian was still carrying on. He was tearing his hair and crying hysterically.

The friend tried to comfort him.

"Now, now, George," he murmured. "Try and control yourself. After all, crying can't bring her back. Why be so hysterical?"

The actor stopped suddenly.

"You think I'm hysterical now?" he questioned proudly. "My dear boy, this is nothing. You should have caught me at the cemetery!"

All of which is by way of introduction to the last portion of my sermon for today. This episode took place in a Harlem joint about a year or so ago.

The girl was sitting at a nearby table. I had always liked this particular kid, but this night I attempted to avoid her. She was very, very drunk. At that stage, you know, where she was liable to do almost anything. And when they're at that stage Hellinger ducks.

I wasn't fast enough. She saw me and she stumbled over to my table. And she began to unfold a story that I had heard on several previous occasions.

A certain theatrical man had put her in a show when she was very young. After a few presents and a great deal of praise, he led her astray. When he tired he gave her the ozone. A short while later she gave birth to a baby.

It was a true story—and I knew it to be true. But I wish you could have heard the yarn as she unfolded it again that night.

"He's a rat," she cried. "The dirtiest kind of a filthy rat. He admits the baby is his, but he hates to support it. No lower dog than he ever lived. He's a beast."

I looked at her.

"Why don't you do something about it?" I asked her. "Why don't you sue him?"

She shook her head.

"How could I do such a thing?" she murmured. "I love him" . . .

What is this thing called love? I'd like to express an opinion—but I'm too polite. . . .

QUEENA MARIO, METROPOLITAN STAR, ON AIR TONIGHT

We Now Present

By DARRELL V. MARTIN, Radio Editor.

Queena Mario, famous soprano of the Metropolitan, shows a wise public taste in the selection of her numbers for Columbia-WJAS at 8:30 tonight . . . only one aria and that from "Mignon" . . . you will enjoy "L'Amour Toujours L'Amour" and the "Italian Street Song" from "Naughty Marietta" . . . in private life Madame Mario is the wife of Wilfred Pelletier noted conductor of the Metropolitan . . . also conductor of the orchestra which will accompany his wife on the radio . . . The first edition of Gold Medal Express on KDKA at this same hour last week was one of the hits of the radio year . . . tonight Rudy Wiedoeft, teacher of Rudy Vallee, is the attraction.

Queena Mario

A new voice on the air—it's a boy (six pounds 12 ounces)—at the home of that popular radio pair, Gene Baldridge and Patti Rude Baldridge. Congratulations!

* * *

My soul! It seems every orchestra on the air is "Walking My Baby Back Home."

* * *

QUESTION A DAY:

Answer—WWSW at the Hotel Schenley is preparing to open May 25; the new police radio station is scheduled to operate April 20.

* * *

STUDIO LIGHTS

Sax Rohmer's real name is Arthur Ward . . .

Hear "Snoop and Peep"—those demon de-tec-a-tives—on WEAF, WENR, WWJ at 7 o'clock tonight . . . and Ben Bernie on WABC at 11:30 . . .

Rudy Vallee, back in New York, says "Heigh-ho, everybody" on WEAF at 11 . . .

When Vastine's Band plays "March of the Mighty" (KDKA at 8) members of the Matto Gross expedition expect to pick it up on short wave on a ranch 100 miles square, near Descalvados, southwestern Brazil . . .

Casey Jones, the aviator, is playing the piano for many soloists you hear on the red network via WCAE . . .

Roy Verret, of KQV, has a drawling voice like Rudy Vallee . . . and Ray Winters, new NBC announcer on "Cheerio," is a dead-ringer for George Hicks . . .

Lily Pons' coloratura in the "Bell Song" from "Lakme" was sufficient to convince anybody of her widely acclaimed ability, but when she sang "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto"—well, wasn't it superb?

STATION XIBT

Synthetic Station XIBT, which broadcasts in its particular channel of hot air at the Pittsburgh Ad Club luncheons every Tuesday to boost the fourth annual exhibit of Pittsburgh advertising during the last four days of April, was off its wave length recently. Bob Wood couldn't borrow a dummy mike for the broadcast, so the show went on without it, and nobody knew the difference.

CAMELS are wrapped Only in MOISTURE-PROOF Cellophane

Cigarettes in prime condition have a moisture content of about 10%. It will be seen by the chart that cigarettes in the ordinary wrapped package lose more than half of their total moisture in thirty days and that only the Camel Humidor Pack delivers cigarettes to you in prime condition.

THE whole country is talking about the throat-easy mildness and the factory freshness of Camel Cigarettes in the new Humidor Pack.

Please examine it carefully. It is an unfailing guide to cigarette selection and enjoyment.

As you can quickly see by the three upper curves on this interesting chart, cigarettes that lack the protection of the Humidor Pack lose their moisture rapidly from the day they are manufactured.

Not so with Camels!

Factory-fresh Camels are air-sealed in the new Sanitary Package which keeps the dust and germs out and keeps the flavor in.

Make these tests yourself

It is so easy to tell the difference between parched dry cigarettes and fresh prime Camels that it is no wonder everybody is reaching for a fresh cigarette today.

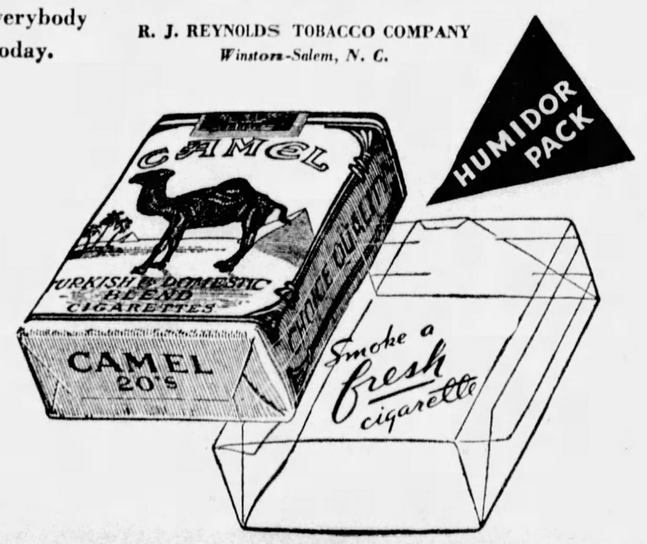
Your ears can tell the difference too. For a dust-dry cigarette crackles under pressure.

But the real test is taste and there is simply no comparison between the rich mildness of a Camel and the hot, brackish smoke from a stale, dry cigarette.

Switch to Camels just for today then leave them tomorrow if you can.

R. J. REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY
Winston-Salem, N. C.

CAMELS



Artificial heat in houses and apartments soon dries the moisture out of cigarettes wrapped the old fashioned way. It is the mark of a considerate hostess, by means of the Humidor Pack, to "Serve a fresh cigarette." Buy Camels by the carton—this cigarette will remain fresh in your home and office.

The LOUDSPEAKER

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, April 6.—With no particular hullabaloo, the microphone moguls managed yesterday to present the greatest number and variety of high class musical attractions yet offered in a single day since the advent of broadcasting.

* * *

All day long and far into the night a tidal wave of symphony bands, of operatic and concert stars, of actors and entertainers, of notables in the day's news splashed against the armchairs. Yet the day occasioned no rush to the advertising shop windows of radio set makers. They still reserve their chief messages to the public for those occasions when the heavyweights climb into the ring.

* * *

Clarence Darrow lost his first and only radio law case—a plea for clemency for Benedict Arnold. The jury, probably the most notable ever assembled, firmly said "no." It could not reasonably do otherwise, considering that half of its membership was made up of representatives of the government. Yet, for the sake of publicity, for the sake of headlines and subsequent controversy, there might have been one dissenter, one protesting voice. The jurors, it seems to me, missed an opportunity.

* * *

The broadcasters hunted down Henry E. Dixey, noted stage star of other days. We had lost track of Dixey. Broadway had not seen him in years, nor had Hollywood claimed him. The radio waves have drawn him in as sooner or later they do all persons who have the slightest plea to fame. For radio's purpose he is to be the next interpreter of Robert E. Lee. Next to Lincoln no figure of American history has been so often represented on the air.

* * *

Germany's roving radio reporter, Hellmut H. Helimut, is making his home land more familiar with America than all the textbooks which pour into the port of Hamburg. He bobs up in the most unexpected places—domes of public buildings, tops of statues, displaying in radio announcers a new and frenzied activity. His enterprise will undoubtedly make him the Floyd Gibbons of Deutschland.

* * *

Skits on prohibition continue to meet the disapproval of the radio chiefs. Webers and Fields were recently ready to air a burlesque of prohibition but studio censorship put its foot down. They were to contend that the Empire State Building was built to such a height that it would be outside the 12-mile limit. A harmless little japery but unwelcome in the halls of the broadcasters.

* * *

Strange the squeamishness of the radio men toward controversial subjects. The stage and screen give them shelter but the studio door is shut and bolted against them.

* * *

Senators who march regularly to the microphone have brought their speeches down into an exact science. They have found that a 15-minute talk requires seven pages of manuscript. They rehearse their speeches before coming to the studios. They are careful to avoid oratory. They do their coughing before they go on the air. They are careful in turning pages to avoid the slightest rustling in turning pages. Now if they would only have something exciting to say.

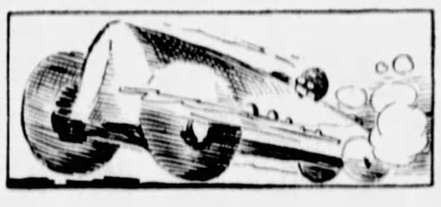
SCOTT HIGH CELEBRATES WINNING TITLE

SUN-TELEGRAPH SPORTS

TWENTY-FOUR — MONDAY, APRIL 6, 1931 — BEST IN PITTSBURGH



Sport Comment

By JAMES J. LONG

Many Infield Shifts. Stanley Cup Victories. Mails Pulls Another. Scott's Triumph. Berger Studies Ruth. McCarey Coming Back.

MACKMEN ALONE REMAIN UNCHANGED

THE BASEBALL SEASON starting one week from tomorrow will be a record-breaker for infield shifts in the major leagues. The game has never shown another year in which so many of the clubs in the fast set made changes in their first line of defense. Reports from the training camp of the Washington club that Buddy Myer is in danger of losing his second-base job to a superior fielder in the person of Minter Hayes indicate that the world champion Athletics may be the only major outfit to go to the post with the same inner cordon presented in 1930.

Buddy Myers

The A's are coming right back with Jimmy Foxx, Max Bishop, Jimmy Dykes and Joe Boley, but at least one switch is in prospect on every other pennant starter. The Pirates headed the movement when they obtained Tommy Thevenow from the Phillies to replace Dick Bartell at shortstop, and if the proposed Myer-Hayes change goes through, Pittsburgh's lead in altering the infield arrangement will have been followed by all the rest with the single exception named.

IN THE LINEUP of the Robins, Fresco Thompson will be at second base, where Mickey Finn, Eddie Moore and others performed last year. Even if Rogers Hornsby returns to play second, the Cubs may show a new shortstop in Bill Jurges, with Woody English moved over to third. The Giants have transferred Fred Lindstrom to right field and stationed Johnny Vergez at the hot corner.

Jim Collins has failed to oust Jim Bottomley from first base for the Cardinals, but it is not yet certain that Sparky Adams will be able to retain the third-sack assignment against the opposition of Andy High and Joel Hunt. The Braves will have a new first baseman in Earl Sheely, succeeding George Sisler and Johnny Neun, and a new third sacker in Bill Dressen or Charley Wilson, instead of Buster Chatham. In addition to Bartell in Thevenow's place at short, the Phils will show Barney Friberg in Thompson's shoes at second, and the Reds will replace Pat Crawford and Horace Ford at first and short with Mickey Heath and Leo Durocher, respectively.

OVER IN THE American League, the Yankees have thought of sending Tony Lazzeri back to second and putting Ben Chapman or Joey Sewell on third, and another plan considered is shifting of Chapman to the outfield and the stationing of Jimmy Reese at second. The Indians will supplant Joey Sewell at the hot corner with Johnny Burnett or George Detore. The Tigers have picked Bill Akers for shortstop and Marvin Owen or old Joe Dugan will start at third.

Lu Blue at first base and Luke Appling at short will be new men in the White Sox infield. Even if the Browns, as is now rumored possible, abandon their plan to use Jimmy Levey, Pittsburgher, at shortstop and shift Ralph Kress to third, they will show an infield change with Irving Burns or George Stanton succeeding Lu Blue at first base. For the Red Sox Bill Sweeney will be at first, Bob Reeves or Paddy Creeden at second and Jack Rothrock at third, replacing Phil Todt, Bill Regan and Otis Miller.

IF THE CHICAGO Blackhawks win out in the National Hockey League playoffs with Les Canadiens, of Montreal, for the Stanley Cup, it will be only the fourth time the famous world championship trophy has been brought to the United States. Seattle won it in 1917, the New York Rangers in 1928 and the Boston Bruins in 1929. This cup, which was put up for competition 39 years ago by Lord Stanley, then governor general of Canada, cost only $25. And according to report, it looks it.

Duster Mails

DUSTER MAILS, who antedated Art Shires and Dizzy Dean as baseball's star ego man, hasn't lost the knack of putting himself across, according to Harold Parrott's report of the manner in which Mails called out the baseball candidates at Santa Clara College, where he is the coach.

Not enough students had turned out for the varsity team, so Duster made a typical Mails speech in the auditorium, constructed a sign imploring the boys to grab their bats and gloves and report, and then paraded up and down the campus with his sign in the role of a sandwich man.

IT WORKED TOO. The students fell for the idea with three cheers, their indifference gave way to enthusiasm, and soon The Great Mails had a squad of 52 candidates on the field instead of the mere handful that had reported at the start.

Now, true to type, Duster announces: "I don't say we will win the California Conference championship, but I'll admit that I am at a loss to pick a team in the conference good enough to beat us."

TODAY SCOTT HIGH is celebrating one of the finest victories ever earned by a Western Pennsylvania school basketball team. In whipping Lower Merion High Saturday night, the North Braddock passers culminated an exceptionally hard season—its fight through its regular schedule, then the W. P. I. A. L. championship, and finally the P. I. A. A. eliminations. The loss of its captain and stellar player, Tomko, at a crucial period, failed to daunt the team's spirit, and it went to the top before taking time out for a needed rest. Its victory is the greater because it survived without Tomko's services; in many sports one man does not make a team—but in basketball, where only five players are involved, one man can make or break a combination. A basketball team is only as strong as its weakest substitute—and Coach Reed had well provided for that. Scott is to be congratulated in its glorious triumph.

WALLY BERGER believes he will be able to beat his 1930 mark of 38 homers this year by copying Babe Ruth's stance. He figures that the secret of Ruth's power is that the Babe turns his shoulder to the ball when it is pitched, thus getting a longer swing.

"The enemy pitchers see a lot of Ruth's right shoulder," said Berger. "This year I am going to show them a lot of my left shoulder. I think I can get more power into my wallop with the easy swing of Ruth. If I get there I'll acknowledge my gratitude to the Babe for what I learned by watching him at bat in the spring practice games."

THE OPERATIONS OF the old guard of fight promoters may not have ended with the death of Tex Rickard. Uncle Tom McCarey, a big-time fistic showman from 1896 to 1915, is talking of coming back at the age of 61 to promote bouts in Los Angeles.

It was then that long fights were banned in California and the four-rounders came in. McCarey says he would not think of promoting fights again on a weekly basis, but would consider putting on "naturals" four or five times a year.

Jack Johnson

IN McCAREY'S OPINION Jack Johnson was the greatest fighter the world ever knew. Abe Attell gets his vote as the best among the little fellows. He tells of another occasion, when, with the betting 10 to 8 against him, Johnson wrote on a slip of paper the number of the round in which he would stop Jack Jeffries, brother of Jim, sealed it in an envelope, and then proceeded to do that very thing. McCarey staged the fight between Abe Attell and Frankie Neil for the featherweight championship in 1906. He also promoted the battle in which Ad Wolgast and Joe Rivers knocked each other out simultaneously, whereupon Referee Jack Welch made the decision that resounded around the world by picking Champion Wolgast off the floor and declaring him the winner. Another of McCarey's shows was the ill-fated one between Jess Willard and Bull Young in 1913, which resulted in the death of Young and caused 20-round bouts in California to be banned.

PIRATES START EASTWARD

REED PASSERS DESERVING OF LAURELS

By JESS CARVER

The Easter bunny deposited a right nice basket at the doorstep of Scott High in leaving the North Braddock school the state scholastic basketball crown. Today Scott is still celebrating and will continue the mirth-making for quite a spell.

Of course, the Scotties worked hard and deserved to be treated royally by the fortunes of the game. The team carried on in the face of rugged competition, a long schedule and the loss, at a very important spot, of its captain. In beating Lower Merion Saturday night, and in such decisive fashion, the team capped a glorious chase by turning in its most brilliant and impressive performance.

REAL CHAMPIONS

It was very fitting that such a championship aggregation should have to come from behind to eventually pull the fattest plum from the pie. Scott's great attack and superb defense in the second half, when it refused to permit the eastern champions to register a single goal from the court and gave it opportunity for only four tries at the charity line, was nothing short of marvelous.

Once again Coach Johnny Reed demonstrated that his team is a team, in every sense of the word. It was Ralph Ferguson who came through with the edge in the goal-getting, but the entire caste contributed to the point total in highly efficient fashion.

As a champion, Scott is about the most formidable of the past four or five years. There is more finesse and finish to the Reed product than there was to Sharon last year, and I am of the opinion that the team is the equal of that combination that carried Hazelton to titles in 1928 and 1929. What do you think?

SUPERSTITIOUS BILL

"Sorry, but it can't be done," quoth Coach Bill. "We are very superstitious, and can't be having pictures taken the day of the game. My no, that would be terrible. Besides, you birds here in Pittsburgh don't figure we're (sounds like a fight manager) much of a ball club anyway."

The funny part of it all was that after the first half, they weren't.

The Tipoff

Saturday's lunch digested better because of the laughs from hearing Cleve Cook, who played some peppish football for Wash.-Jeff not so far back, explain about the double wing back formation. Cleve alternated between hacking away at some swell roastbraten and drawing football formations on Wolfgang's tablecloth. His best crack was: "If them guards don't come out right, it looks like a traffic tie-up at the Liberty Tubes."

The committee working on the reclassification of the W. P. I. A. L., with the idea in mind of establishing a Class AA for football, has a tough job ahead of it. Messrs. Hulton, Gardner, Stewart, Carroll and Glock will have a peck of headaches before they are through.

It is going to be difficult to decide upon an o. k. method of basing the classification. Enrollment hardly will do. There are schools in the league with student bodies of around six or seven hundred who haven't won a big football game since the year one. Others, with smaller enrollments, are annually up at the top, or close thereby.

The correct way to handle the proposition would be or will be to check back over the records of all eligible institutions for the past five or six years, and then include in the new class those that have won the most big games and that have compiled the most impressive records.

Someone bobbed up with a good one at a gab session Thursday day to the effect that the Chicago police are going to put all of their eggs in one basket.

JAYS GET LAMB

JEANNETTE, Pa., April 6.—Dave Lamb, manager of the Charleroi Governors in the Middle Atlantic League last year, has been signed to pitch for the Jeannette Jays this season.

Says Nick Altrock

(Baseball's Comedian)

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., April 6.—Well, the Phillies beat the A's two straight in their series, which proves the cock-eyed world hasn't been to an oculist after all. It is so cold in Philadelphia right now a catcher is liable to get his fingers frostbitten just signaling the pitcher. But the management called both clubs north so early because it's cheaper to make the boys board at home.

Nick Altrock

I caught a glimpse of Chattanooga's lady pitcher today. She has swell curves, but not the kind that break over the plate. She was throwing enough wide balls today to start an Easter parade around the parks. Still, when you consider Babe Ruth's beauty and Hack Wilson's legs, baseball can stand a lot more sex appeal.

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF SATURDAY: STEEL THAT FLOATS—In the General Electric "House of Magic" at Schenectady, N. Y., technicians have constructed several models of steel that floats, and one model is in the "Believe It Or Not" collection of oddities. In the base of the apparatus is a magnet of cobalt steel, and in the bar that floats likewise is a magnet of the same steel. When the bar is placed between the pegs so that the positive and negative ends of the magnets are together, it is held to the base with the strength of two magnets, but, when the bar is reversed and the like poles of the magnets are parallel, it floats in the air, held in place by the pegs. MILLER HUGGINS WON SIX PENNANTS IN 12 YEARS—The late Miller Huggins, whose name is illustrious in baseball history, was manager of the New York Americans from 1918 to 1929. In those 12 years, his team captured the American League pennant six times (1921-22-23-26-27-28), and the world championship three times (1923-27-28).

BUCS, TIGERS BEGIN LONG HOME TREK

By CHARLES J. DOYLE

Staff Correspondent

RENO, Nev., April 6.—The well-conditioned Pirate squad today sped through Nevada on the home journey after six full weeks of springtime preparation in California. The Pittsburghers departed from the San Francisco district last night at 9 o'clock, the Ensmen saying a season's farewell with a double victory over the Missions and Seals, of San Francisco.

Traveling with the Buccos on a special train are the Detroit Tigers, who also finished up their far western tour yesterday. The two major league teams are scheduled for two more days and nights of riding before they reach Kansas City, where they will stop off for a single game, to be played Wednesday afternoon.

SERIES WITH TIGERS

The itinerary then calls for a overnight jump to Decatur, a contest also being scheduled in the Illinois city. At the conclusion of the Decatur game, the teams will hurry on to the home of the Tigers, where games will be staged Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The Buccos will go direct from Detroit to Chicago. They will spend Monday, an open date, at the lair of the Cubs and will be ready for the opening day festivities of one week from tomorrow.

The Freebooters were aggressive to a marked degree as they won morning and afternoon battles with the Missions and Seals. They copped the forenoon game in competition with the first-named team, the score being 5 to 2. In the afternoon, the big leaguers smeared the Seals, 15 to 7.

'HAWKS SQUARE ICE SERIES

CHICAGO, April 6.—(AP.)—Chicago's Blackhawks squared the Stanley Cup hockey series with Les Canadiens with a 2-to-1 triumph here last night after 74 minutes of raging play.

A goal by Johnny Gottselig, scored so easily that a crowd of more than 17,700 hardly realized what had happened, ended the battle after nearly 25 minutes of overtime.

Les Canadiens had staged a dash into Chicago territory when Gottselig obtained possession of the rubber. Accompanied by Romnes and Couture, he skated lazily up the ice and, from about 15 feet out and to George Hainsworth's right, took his shot. It flashed by Hainsworth's shoulder before he could realize what had occurred.

The remaining three matches of the series will be played in Montreal, starting Thursday night.

TITLE GAME TOMORROW

As a result of Buffalo's 6-4 victory at Cleveland Saturday night, and Windsor's 2-1 triumph over the Yellow Jackets here, the International League hockey championship will go to the winner of the Buffalo-Windsor postponed game at Buffalo tomorrow night. Windsor can cop the title by holding Buffalo to a tie, but the Bisons need a victory to capture the crown.

Whitey Fields' brilliant play featured the Saturday night game here. A Pittsburgh penalty enabled the Bulldogs to grab the decision after a Fields-McIntyre play had given the Jackets a 1-0 lead after two minutes of overtime play.

NO. 15.—JACK MEALEY.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 6.—Still another of those "veteran recruits" who dot the Pirate roster this spring is Maurice Francis (Jack) Mealey, former Philadelphia boy and the same young man who handled, almost exclusively, the slants of Charley Wood as Wichita won the Western League pennant last season.

Mealey is fighting it out with Hal Finney for the third-string catching job, holding an edge for the reason that he is the only receiver on the club who handles the southpaw phenom properly.

Jack Mealey

Maurice Francis is a product of the Germantown district of Philadelphia. Many years ago, his uncle, Jack Mealey, was a catcher for the Athletics, and, as soon as the nephew began to show some of the same line of goods, an oldtimer fastened the name of the relative on the younger man. So Jack it is, and Jack it will be as long as he is in baseball.

WOOD'S BATTERY MATE

"Gosh darn it," exclaimed Wood in his South Carolina dialect, "I think I won something like 20 of 21 games while Jack was behind the bat. Guess I will miss something if he doesn't stay around. He knows exactly how to catch my hook and he also knows how to handle me.

"I very seldom shook Jack off all last season. He is smart under the bat, and I found it best to listen to what he had to say. There were a few times, however, when I thought he was wrong and, when I advanced my ideas, he told me that perhaps I was right and he would change the sign. It takes a smart fellow to see both sides all the time, but Jack always could do this, and that is why we always get along well together. We have been roommates all spring."

It is quite a sight to watch Mealey handle Wood. Clever as Rolly Hemsley is, he finds it hard to follow the "downer" tossed by the slim lefthander.

PREVENTS WILD PITCHES

Wood's almost perfect overhand swing gives his curve ball a decided drop movement and at times it falls more than a foot as the batter swings at it. If he did not have a catcher who could dig the

BUCS RELEASE THREE ROOKIES

By Staff Correspondent.

RENO, Nev., April 6.—Three Pirate rookie pitchers today were on their way to the Pittsburgh farm in Wichita, they having been released yesterday. They are Vernon Kennedy, James Bivin and Lee Johnson, three big right-handers, all of whom have considerable promise.

Kennedy and Bivin advanced from the Mississippi Valley League to the Pirates, while Johnson was a free agent in his Salt Lake City home when the Pittsburghers picked him up.

The three kids will be carefully tutored by Art Griggs, manager of the Wichita club. Griggs spent quite a lot of time at the Paso Robles camp of the Buccos, and he already has a good line on the three recruits. The disposition of the trio cut the Pirate squad to 30 players.

KLEIN SIGNS CONTRACT

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—(AP.)—Chuck Klein, the Phillies hard-hitting outfielder, has signed a three-year contract. The Hoosier home run clouter had been a persistent holdout this spring, and did not report while the Phils were in training in Florida.

Neither Klein nor Lewis O. Ruch, president of the Phillies, would discuss the terms of the contract, but it was understood from those close to the management the player would receive more than $40,000 for the three years. Klein had demanded $14,500 for this season.

By HARRY KECK
Sports Editor

Slapsy Maxie Rosenbloom, clowning king of the light-heavyweights, does his light fantastic on the boards of the Motor Square Garden ring tonight, with Billy Jones, former local Negro, who got his start as a fistician in Philadelphia, serving as his foil.

Maxie Rosenbloom

It has been almost two years since Slapsy Maxie last showed in these parts, and meanwhile he has won the 175-pound title. It's going to be hard to get it away from him, for, like the late Harry Greb, also an unorthodox boxer, he is a great man fighting for a decision over the route. And he is so tough and rock-ribbed that he seldom has been hurt by an opponent in the ring.

JONES WORTHY FOE

Jones is anything but a cakewalk for Rosey, however. Billy has proved himself one of the best light-heavies in the business. He has been in there with the best of them and few have outgalloped him. He is a harder hitter than Maxie and has been gunning for a crack at the latter for some time and was more than pleased to grab a match with him even without the title at stake, as is the case tonight, when they will meet over the class weight limit. Nor is he in the least worried by the fact that Rosenbloom boasts that no Negro fighter ever has been able to beat him and that he almost invariably does his best work when opposed to one of them.

Chet Smallwood, Akron southpaw favorite, meets Len Porter, Negro, of Los Angeles, a stablemate of Baby Joe Gans, in the eight-round semi-final. Paul Oger, of Moundsville, W. Va., and Joey Spiegel, Uniontown southpaw, are in the second bout, and Freddie Haverlack, of New York, stablemate of Rosenbloom, boxes Joey Boler, of Erie, in the six-round opener, at 8:30, rounding out a complete card of out-of-town talent.

Between Rounds

Two teams of local amateur boxers left last night for the East, one to represent this city in the National A. A. U. junior championships in Boston tonight and tomorrow night and the other to compete in an inter-city tournament in New York. The Boston team includes Paul Monar, Sammy Julian, Fritz Zivic, Eddie Zivic, Don Pesto, Charles Crovatto, John Hazuda and Leonard Hawkins, and that battling in New York is made up of Bob Rupple, Carl Padvorac, Chuck Mullins and George Julius.

Marty Gormack, of McKeesport, boxes Al Ghan, of Columbus, O., in the six-round semi-final to the Eddie Brannon-Ray Kiser bout at the Moose Temple Friday night. Ace Hebe, of Cincinnati, and Tony Marino, of McKeesport, are in the second bout.

Battling Gizzy, Donora lightweight, has been back in training for a week, following a layoff of several months, and will return to the ring late this month in a bout at Washington, Pa. After that he will appear in Wheeling and Johnstown and then at the Moose Temple, according to his manager, Abie Witz.

sphere out of the dirt near the plate. Charley would set a new record for wild pitches.

Mealey grabs up the scoops as easily as if he were as if he were sitting in a rocking chair. He has handled Wood so much he has a fine judgment of the amount of drop on the pitches and gathers in the low shots with or without men on the bases. He has the knack and the prospect of a runaway ball does not seem to bother him.

Rockne Converted Gipp From Baseball Player Into Renowned Gridder

ROCKNE'S LIFE STORY—FIFTH INSTALMENT

By WARREN BROWN

(Copyright, 1931, Chicago Herald and Examiner.)

CHICAGO, April 6.—There seems to be no question but that the fame of George Gipp somewhat overshadowed the opening of Knute Rockne's career as head coach at Notre Dame.

And yet it was Rockne who interested Gipp in football, and started him on the path of gridiron glory.

Knute Rockne

For Gipp had come to Notre Dame with no reputation as a football player. Baseball was his game, and baseball directly was what brought him to the school where his football fame has become part of its tradition.

Dolly Gray, who had been a catcher on Notre Dame baseball teams, registered from the same neighborhood in Michigan, in which Gipp lived. It was Gray who suggested that Gipp come to Notre Dame.

I am reminded now, of a story once told me by Jack Elder, who was a star on Rockne's championship team of 1929, and who has the added distinction —Jack insists that this describes it—of having been a member, in 1928, of the Notre Dame team which lost four games, or two more than any other Rockne-coached team ever dropped in a single season.

PREP SCHOOL STAR

Elder was a prep school pitcher, when he decided to register at Notre Dame.

He remained there four years, and graduated, to become a newspaperman. In those four years he never once touched a baseball, but became a football star, and a sprinter who attained world records.

It is part of the popular belief that anyone who goes to Notre Dame, nowadays, sooner or later tries his hand (or his foot) at football. And it must have been so in Gipp's day, for one day he was discovered kicking a football prodigious distances, and drop kicking, as well.

His first major accomplishment was the completion of a 62-yard drop kick against Western Normal. Gipp was a member of the freshman squad then, but from that moment all Notre Dame and all the football world began to take more than passing interest in him.

That was his football debut.

From then on, Gipp went forth in his own way, usually at his own rate, to make football history, culminating in the 55-yard pass that he flung to Norman Barry in the Northwestern game of 1920, the longest completed pass up to that time. But more of that, later.

Gipp was considerably older than the rank and file of the lads on the Notre Dame squad of his time, and most of them regarded him with awe. He had few campus associates, but he was always ready with a helping hand to all his mates.

SEEMED LIKE COACH

"Gosh, he always seemed like a coach to me," said Kiley. "He was always a peace-maker when any scraps started, and he seemed so far ahead of the rest of us, we all looked up to him "There was nothing he couldn't do, on a football field."

Gipp's greatest ball game was that against Army in 1920.

The game was won by Notre Dame, 27 to 17, and in it Gipp exceeded all former efforts, playing to the point of exhaustion.

When he had left the game, he had accounted for 236 yards gained by running, and to this had to be added 96 more, the result of his deadly forward passing.

He ran back kick-offs, he circled the ends, slashed off tackles, and bucked the line.

He tossed out those "soft" passes, which the receivers found so easy to handle. His kicks were invariably placed high enough for the ends to get down the field and cover them.

"Everything that fellow did," says Roger Kiley, "was just the way you wanted it done. If you happened to be part of the play that followed or preceded his part in it."

"You might think," says Kiley, "that it seemed strange there wasn't the volley of applause that usually greets the departure of a star player from the game after doing his work well. Our reaction was that any sort of noise then would have been almost a sacrilege. That how Gipp's play affected everyone."

PURDUE NEXT FOE

Notre Dame engaged in an easy game, the week following, with Purdue, and the following Saturday brought another critical contest in the Notre Dame season, the game with Indiana.

The Rockne psychological touch was evidenced in this game.

Even with the great Gipp in action, things went from bad to worse with Notre Dame, and late in the game Indiana was leading, 10 to 7.

Berry, whose name has been linked with Gipp in many of the latter's accomplishments in football, was on the bench.

There had been some difference between him and Rockne, and Berry, by his own testimony, was wondering just what could be done to re-establish himself.

Years later, Joe Savoldi sat idle through some games on the Notre Dame schedule, until Rockne decided that he was ready to let Joe cut loose, and wreck the opposition, and that Joe decided that this was just what he had been waiting all that time to do.

Suddenly, says Berry, Rockne turned to him:

"Go in there, Berry!" he barked, "and tell those wooden soldiers to wake up!"

Berry was in there almost as soon as the sentence was completed and it is a matter of record that it was his long run, almost immediately, that carried the ball a yard or two from the Indiana goal line. From that point, no one ever stopped Gipp for long, and when he bucked across the last stripe for a touchdown, the game went to Notre Dame, 13 to 10.

Gipp's shoulder was badly damaged in this game, and it seemed impossible for him to get into the following Saturday's struggle with Northwestern.

So great a figure had Gipp become by that time that the crowd which went out that following Saturday didn't have in mind, particularly, the game between Northwestern and Notre Dame. It wanted to see Gipp.

Gipp was in no shape to play, and Rockne withheld him from the game.

The stands sent up a cry: "We want Gipp!" and before the last half was completed that cry had become an insistent roar:

"We want Gipp!"

Against his better judgment, Rockne sent Gipp into the game with a few minutes left to play.

GIPP TOSSES PASS

And then it was that Gipp, far down the field, launched the 55-yard pass into the waiting hands of Berry, who went across for a touchdown, one of the many that Notre Dame had scored that afternoon.

This was Gipp's last football game.

Within three weeks he succumbed to pneumonia, and went on to wait on Rockne.

And in the passing of Gipp, again rises one of those strange coincidences, which seem to be part of the story of Notre Dame, of Rockne, and of Gipp.

Hartley (Hunk) Anderson, guard on the 1920 Notre Dame team, boyhood chum of Gipp, and later his team-mate, accompanied Gipp's body to its final resting place. In one of the many endeavers made to prolong Gipp's life, Anderson had given his blood for a transfusion.

Not quite 11 years later, this same Anderson, now line coach at Notre Dame and Rockne's chief aide during 1930, was one of the delegation that reverently guarded the body of Rockne when it was brought back from Kansas to Notre Dame.

Anderson, who had been chum to Gipp, fairly worshiped Rockne, and was a perfect foil—or should one say "butt?"—for Rockne's frequent sallies.

Marvelous as was Rockne's memory—and more of that later on—he was stumped when asked, last fall, who was the last man who kicked a field goal on a Notre Dame team.

There were others who came along after Gipp who volunteered to do drop kicking.

CASTNER GOOD ONE

Notre Dame was playing on a rain-soaked field, and the ball was about midfield. The team had but one kicking signal, and when that was given, Castner, instead of punting, tried a drop kick. He foozled the attempt, with the heavy ball, and it hit someone on the back a few yards distant. Nothing dismayed, when the signal was repeated Castner again essayed a drop kick, with similar results.

"Aw, it was only 45 yards," Castner replied, placidly, and Rockne, at a loss for words, for one of the few times in his career, dashed his hat in the mud, and jumped on it, again and again.

(To Be Continued Tomorrow.)

MORGAN BEATS SHANNON BY 2-1 SCORE

By TOM BIRKS

The other game in the Keystone League found Cecil disappointing Dunlevy. The Millers Run team is to be dropped from the schedule. The officers of the Keystone League probably will take drastic action with Cecil for its non-appearance at the league meeting Sunday. Manager Clarence Kunkle assured Dunlevy he would be on the job.

CROWD HOSTILE

One of the largest crowds of the season watched the Morgan-Shannon battle. Though Buff Donnelli, as usual, was on the job with both of the goals, neither Fred nor Buff was in the game. Both decided not to take any chances with a hostile crowd watching the contest.

The first goal came after 20 minutes, Buff taking a pot shot from 20 yards to beat Benick. A foolish play on the part of Benick, in pushing Barrafoldi, resulted in the second goal. With the ball going out of play, the Shannon goalie took Barrafoldi out of the play with both hands, and a penalty was awarded. Buff took the kick and Benick never had a chance with the shot.

Shannon tried hard, and four minutes later Zeewan reduced the score from close in. That finished the tallying. Villani, Matthews, Sickles and Van Jura showed to advantage. The lineup:

ARGENTINA VICTOR

BUENOS AIRES, April 6.—(AP.)—Argentina made a clean sweep of its Davis Cup matches with Uruguay by winning the concluding singles matches late today by one-sided scores. Lucio Del Castillo, of Argentina, defeated Carlos Gainza, 6-0, 6-0, 6-1, and his teammate, Ronaldo Boyd, trounced Ernesto Hernandez by the same score.

GOLF PROS READY FOR SEASON

By VERN SWARTSFAGER

Although there are still several country clubs which have, at this writing, left their professional berths unfilled, and likewise a few professionals are as yet unsigned, most of the clubs affiliated, and many of those not affiliated with the Western Pennsylvania Golf Association are all set, as it were, for the season about to open. Almost all of the instructors will be on the job May 1, although some are working now.

The first real dose of golf was administered yesterday, when Easter brought balmy weather, e'en though a trifle chilly. Temporary greens for the most part confronted the linksmen—but did not ruffle them. Because of last summer's drought, there are more temporary greens in play this year than in many recent springs.

The list of professionals for this season, as ready at this time, follows:

Sleepy Hollow, Franklin, Thomas E. Sullivan; St. Mary's, Tom Gray; Kittanning; Harmony C. C., Ben Loeffler; Burke Glen, H. G. Olsen; Slippery Rock, unsigned; East Liverpool, Andy Patrick; Ohio Bend, Mansfield, O., Chuck Onoretta; Tom Hackets, Mahoning Valley, Sunnyhanna, Johnstown, Bert Battell; Belmont Hills, Rader Street; Wheeling, A. C., Chapman; Cedar Rocks, P. O. Hart; Meadville, unsigned.

Indiana, Kenneth Rutherford; Kahkwa Club, Charley Hymers; Greenville, unsigned; Conemaugh, not announced; Kiski, not announced; Pike Run, not announced; Punxsutawney, not announced; Sewickley Valley Y, not announced; Titusville, not announced.

E. PITTSBURGH PINMEN FAIL

BUFFALO, April 6.—Pennsylvania pinsters proved grand contributors, instead of extractors, as far as the annual American Bowling Congress tournament prize fund was concerned, here yesterday, for not a lad from East Pittsburgh, DuBois or Erie was able to make the grade, small as it is this year.

Four changes occurred among the leaders. Fred Maerzle and Harry O'Brien, Watertown, Wis., took the runner-up spot in the doubles division with a total of 1290.

Harry Johnson and Walter Polacki, Chicago, rolled into eighth place with a count of 1269, and Harry Sanders and Tommy Zavakos, Dayton products, tied for tenth, scoring 1260.

Paul O'Keefe, of Chicago, piled up an aggregate of 1882 to take tenth berth in the all-events division. Yesterday's Pennsylvania series:

DUBOIS, PA.

Singles—L. Chambers, 503; J. Levinson 547; P. Nichols, 570; F. Edwards, 556; A. Khan, 537; H. Lowe 488.

EAST PITTSBURGH

Singles—T. Roantree, 196; L. Schumacher, 573; E. Voyek, 574; J. Blankett, 465; A. Schoch, 537; L. Brahmer, 558; A. Bastian, 524; S. Arner, 551.

IRIS, PA.

Singles—G. Dennert, 449; F. Mahoney, 498.

Eli, Green Protest Coaching Edict

NEW YORK, April 6.—The pendulum of agitation against coaches of the Eastern Intercollegiate Baseball League directing their teams from the benches appeared to be swinging back toward the mentors when two more members of the circuit protested against the removal of the tutors to the stands.

Yale and Dartmouth are the latest members of the league to indicate a preference for having play directed from the bench by coaches. Previously, Columbia, Princeton and Pennsylvania had protested the move designed to let the boys run their own sports.

Braddock Youth Keeps Lion Job In Family

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., April 6.—In the election of Robert C. Hileman, of Braddock, Pa., to the managership of the varsity basketball team for next season, Penn State College has given this post to the second member of the family. Hileman's older brother, Joseph, held this position for the 1924 season. The Hilemans are the first brothers to become managers of the same sport team at Penn State in many years.

SPORT VIGNETTES

John J. Boyle, the minor league player, who died a few days ago, was a contemporary of Bill Regan, the Pirates' second baseman, formerly of the Boston Red Sox, on the sandlots of the Oakland district . . . They started out together, with Regan playing second base and Boyle shortstop on the old J. J. Coyne and Eberhart teams . . . Boyle, who was only 31 years old, was a graduate of Duff's Business College and played with Pitcher Regis Leheny, also of Oakland, now of the Boston Braves, at St. Bonaventure College . . . He also played for the Frederick and Hagerstown (Md.) clubs in the Blue Ridge League, Cumberland in the Mid-Atlantic League and for Hornell, N. Y., and Chattanooga . . . California (Pa.) Teachers' College wants it to be known that the California Independents girls' team, whose game with the Goldenson Vanities at California last week ended in a row, is not identified with the institution . . . The college has not sponsored a representative girls' basketball team for four years.

John Boyle

Great Scott! . . . . They've come through again, those Scott High School basketball players, of North Braddock, this time to win the state championship in a great finish against Lower Merion High . . . . . And don't think there was anything accidental about the fine play of Scotties during the long season just closed . . . . . Take the word of Johnny Freund for it. . . . . Johnny, dean of local basketball authorities, all along has been predicting big things for the Johnny Reed-coached aggregation . . . . . "I always liked Reed as a player and felt he couldn't fail to deliver as a coach," is Freund's compliment. . . . . And there's a reason . . . . Reed as a player was a close approach to the oldtime professionals so dear to the Freundian heart, and he naturally teaches his charges the same winning type of play . . . . A lot of credit is coming to the Scott High players for carrying on through a tough season and the post-season schedule that followed. . . . . The lads have achieved something of which they and their town well may be proud for the remainder of their days.

The more y read of it, the more you are convinced that Warren Brown's narrative of the life and battles of the late Knute Rockne, appearing in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, is THE life story of the colorful Norwegian-American . . . Brown knew his Rockne as few people knew and understood him, and he writes from first-hand knowledge of his subject . . . Pin a few medals, if you have any to spare, on the breasts of our Carl Shatto, who has just steered the Yellow Jackets hockey club through an exciting season and a troubled playoff series and our Jess Carver, who has carried on through a collegiate and scholastic basketball grind to bring home a Western Pennsylvania team the state champion among the schoolboy passers . . . Enos Kirkpatrick, former star of the Brooklyn Robins, is one veteran pastimer who can't be talked out of the notion that Honus Wagner was the greatest baseball player of all time . . . He's played with and against the immortal Ty Cobb in exhibition games and has seen Babe Ruth and other outstanding figures come and go, but he still cherishes pleasant memories of the greatness of the Flying Dutchman that cast all others into the background.

Art Smith, West Virginia University coach, does not like to be kidded about track and field athletics . . . Which reminds us that the outdoor season in the cinderpath sport is just around the corner again . . . And Tom Birks, our soccer authority, assures us that there really is a three months' closed season in soccer, although that doesn't seem possible . . . Soccer, like death, taxes and poor relations, appears always to be with us . . . Hard-boiled eggs may not be just the right thing socially, but this is the time of the year when they are the rage in our best families.

The Western Union Telegraph Company had six circuits of wires installed on the Notre Dame campus for the filing of stories by correspondents attending the Rockne funeral services last Saturday, probably the most impressive ceremony ever given a sports notable and easily the one attracting most widespread interest, with millions listening in on the radio broadcast and reading every line the papers printed about the occasion . . . Prize lists just received show that the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada Fort Garry Unit No. 60 sweepstakes on the Grand National Steeplechase, which had a wide sale in the Pittsburgh district, was not a phony, as charged at the time, but the real McCoy.

They claim Phil Raymond, Baltimore lightweight, is as hard a hitter with his left hand as the famous George (K. O.) Chaney, his fellow-townsman, was in his prime, and it will be remembered that Chaney established an all-time record for knockout victims . . . They call Raymond One Shot Phil . . . His latest victim was Young Jack Gallagher, of Philadelphia, who had not been stopped in something like 200 fights, but was out for a half hour after Phil hit him on the chin.—HARRY KECK.

REARICKS WIN FLOOR TITLE

NEW BRIGHTON, Pa., April 6.—The Aliquippa Rearicks won the Class A championship of the fourth annual Beaver County basketball tournament, completed midnight Saturday. The Rearicks won the finale from the Henrys, 28-16.

Pittsburgh boys took their share of the honors on Class B when the Vic Bohdens, of Beaver Falls, came through to the championship, defeating the Youngstown Duffys, 20-17.

Lott Beats Sutter In New Orleans Final

NEW ORLEANS, April 6.—(AP.)—Fighting nip and tuck for five sets, George Lott, of Philadelphia, turned back Clifford Sutter, New Orleans youth, yesterday to win the singles championship of the New Orleans Country Club invitation tennis tournament. The scores were 6-4, 6-2, 4-6, 1-6, 6-4.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., April 6.—The twenty-second annual interscholastic track and field championships of the Pennsylvania State College will be held May 9 this year. Announcement of this date, instead of a later time as originally planned, was made today by the Athletic Association office.

NEW YORK, April 6.—(AP.)—The Fall River soccer team, now moved to New York to become the Yankees, easily defeated the Chicago Bricklayers, 6 to 2, yesterday in the first game of the national challenge cup series for the Delaware trophy, emblem of the soccer championship of the United States.

KEMPTON PARK, Eng., April 6.—(AP.)—Brig. Gen. Charles Lambton's Trimdon won the Queen's prize handicap at two miles today from a field of 16. Sir Hugo Hirst's Coaster was second, three lengths back, and Mrs. V. D. Sainsbury's Lopear third, two lengths behind Coaster.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 6.—Sam Parks, Jr., captain of the [illegible] was among the 150 entries who teed off here today from a field of 16, qualifying round in the annual North and South amateur tourney.

PIRATES START HOMEWARD

Portland Beavers, Oakland Oaks and Los Angeles Angels.

PETE COMES THROUGH

The big standout of the Pirate drives of yesterday was the modest Peter McClanahan, Texas League outfielder. Peter weighed in with a long homer and a timely triple to help clinch the morning game, and, batting for Remy Kremer in the afternoon, he drove in his second homer of the day on the first pitched ball. Each drive cleared the faraway left field fence of the Seals' new park, and there was a Pirate aboard on each occasion.

MARKET TREND TURNS DOWN AT NOON

Bears Take Courage When Steel Fails to Follow Advance—Sales Meager

NEW YORK, April 6.—(AP.)—Uncertainty over the outlook in the steel industry cast a shadow across the path of advancing stock prices today.

Saturday's rebound was continued into the new week for a time in the morning, but the courage of the bear faction was restored as U. S. Steel failed to follow the advance. Selling of shares in which adverse dividend news is expected turned the trend downward by midday. Trading, however, was in meager volume.

With the early spring shopping season ending on the passing of Easter, and steel mill activity showing signs of having reached a seasonal peak, Wall street has entered a period of watchful waiting. The scanty amount of real liquidation which has appeared in the stock market is regarded as one of the most encouraging aspects of the situation. Necessitous liquidation appears to have been well mopped up last December, and the distribution of fixed trust shares seems to be taking up much of the trickle of discouraged selling by investors.

At the same time, a broad demand for either stocks or bonds such as might be expected as a forerunner of business recovery has as yet failed to appear. Premature bullish efforts to put up stocks probably has hurt investors' confidence. The weekly surveys of investment advisory issues continue to stress the opportunities offered by what seems to be the low area of a major economic cycle, but at the same time suggest purchases of equity shares only on substantial declines.

The bond market was dull and sluggish. Call money rose to 2 per cent, and then to 2½ per cent, the highest since January 2, after renewals at 1½, probably reflecting withdrawals in connection with the Government offering of Treasury certificates expected tomorrow. The remaining points of uncertainty in the foreign situation are still a depressing influence in foreign government issues.

Pure Oil Starts Pipe Line Project

TOLEDO, April 6.—The Pure Oil Company has started work on a $1,000,000 pipe line from its new refinery located on 80 acres it recently acquired from the Standard Oil Company of Ohio, to the plant of the Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, in Rossford. The line will transport refinery gas which will be used by the Libbey-Owens-Ford plant.

Rail Production Declines in 1930

Rails produced in the United States last year fell to 1,873,233 tons, compared with 2,722,138 tons in 1929, the American Iron and Steel Institute reports. The total includes girder and high T rails for electric and street railways and rails rerolled from defective and old rails.

Buick Motor Shows Gain in Deliveries

DETROIT, April 6.—Retail deliveries of Buick Motor Company division of General Motors Corporation for the first three months of 1931 totaled 21,819 units, as against 20,533 in the like period a year ago. Each of the three months this year showed an increase in retail deliveries.

James Reappointed To Reserve Board

WASHINGTON, April 6.—President Hoover has reappointed George R. James to the Federal Reserve Board. His term expires April 7.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, April 6.—Influenced by auspicious crop reports from domestic winter wheat territory, grain prices tended downward early today. Profit taking for recent purchasers was in evidence. Opening ⅝ off to ¼c up, wheat later underwent a general sag. Corn started unchanged to ⅝ down, and subsequently declined further.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, April 6.—Cotton opened steady today 1 point higher to 2 points lower and showed a generally steady tone during the early trading with May working up to 10.52c and October to 11.08c, or about 3 to 4 points net higher. Owing to the continuation of the Easter holidays there were no Liverpool cables to influence sentiment here.

The early buying carried the price of May up to 10.53c and October to 11.12c, or about 5 to 8 points net higher. Business was quiet, however, and prices sagged off slightly later in the morning. At midday May was holding around 10.52c and October 11.08c with active months 2 to 3 points net higher.

Forbes

No Decisive Trend Is Yet Discernible

By B. C. FORBES

NO DECISIVE movement yet in industry. Easter trade reports fairly cheerful. General price level stationary. Unemployment slightly less. Securities down. Sentiment cautious.

Mr. Forbes

That summary conveys that the new quarter has not brought any drastic or decisive developments. It cannot be claimed that optimism is as unqualified as it was at New Year. The first quarter has been something of a disappointment in that there has been little, if any, more than seasonal recovery. Admittedly, the country has held its own. But instead of a V-shaped course, conditions are forming the base of a U.

Whether spring will complete the sideways movement and inaugurate a rise is now rather widely doubted. The more general expectation is that no vigorous upswing is probable until fall.

Consequently, stocks bought when expectations were brighter have lately been passing from strong into weaker hands.

AS HAS BEEN TRUE for weeks on end, a favorable development at one point is offset by an unfavorable development at another.

There are such irregular movements as a rather sharp increase in consumption of electric power and a drop of 24 per cent in bank clearings as compared with a year ago. Practically no net change in the general price level for March, but a severe drop in wheat futures and in other grains; a modest gain in employment last month, but more reports of wage and salary reductions; moderate betterment in railway car loadings but notifications by shippers that they expect to need somewhat fewer cars this quarter; a recession (not unseasonable) in steel production but a rise in cotton textile production; heavier output of automobiles, but another relapse in rubber, cotton and copper; continued omissions and reductions of dividends but some diminution in commercial failures.

Perhaps it was fitting that Bradstreets should record a slight advance in commodity prices and Duns a slight decline for last month.

When chain stores, manufacturers, mail order houses, department stores and other businesses report decreases of 10 or 15 or 20 per cent, in sales, the interpretion is likely to be unfavorable. Enough consideration is not given to the fact that there has been a corresponding decline in prices. In many instances there has been no shrinkage in the volume of goods moved or made. One might even go further and say that it is unlikely that total consumption in the United States will contract much more even should extreme conservations be exercised.

THE OPTIMISM which was generated in the financial world has been tempered by disappointment over the failure of the gilt edged bond market to advance impressively. Traditionally, the best bonds must lead the way to a sustained upward movement in stocks. Lately the bond market has been sluggish and weakish, notwithstanding the continued superabundance of extremely cheap money in Wall street and better balanced money markets in Europe.

Pittsburgh United Has Profit for Quarter

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

PITTSBURGH UNITED CORPORATION, formerly the Oil Well Supply Company, reported for the quarter ended December 31, 1931, net profits after all charges of $150,674. After deducting preferred dividends this was equivalent to 11 cents a share on 389,963 shares of common stock.

Income and dividends received during the period amounted to $194,391 and expenses reached $43,717.

The report points out that the United States Steel Corporation on August 25, 1930, exercised its option to purchase the assets and business of the Oil Well Supply Company and paid 108,402 shares of its common stock. As guarantees that receivables and inventories would yield $7,996,225 and $8,850,927 respectively the steel corporation required the deposit of 10,000 shares of its stock in escrow. Under the guarantees a statement of amounts due, if any, must be presented within 45 days after May 31, 1931. If an agreement is not reached by August 31, the question of the settlement of guarantees is to be submitted to arbitration.

Officials are hopeful that there will be no loss realized on receivables or inventories but the report states that, on account of general business conditions, and particularly the condition of the oil business, the collection of receivables is not proceeding as rapidly as would be the case if business conditions were more nearly normal.

Sale Protects Preferred

IN COMPARISON WITH the profit of $150,674 shown in the final three months of the year, after the sale was made, the reports points to the fact that operations for the first nine months of the year resulted in an operating loss of $536,758. It declares that if the sale had not been made it would have been necessary to suspend the payment of dividends on the preferred stock. The ownership of 108,402 shares of common stock of the United States Steel Corporation, instead of plants properties and other assets has greatly strengthened the value of both the preferred and common stock, according to the statement.

The stock of United States Steel was placed on the books at $155.50 a share and the total amount carried on the balance sheet at $16,856,511. On December 31, 1930, the closing price was $139 1/8, making the total market value at that date $15,081,428.

Covers Dividends

UPON THE BASIS OF DIVIDENDS on the United States Steel Corporation common stock being continued at the rate of $7 per share annually, the net income of the corporation will be more than sufficient to meet the dividend and sinking fund requirements on its outstanding preferred stock.

The officers and directors are desirous of not only liquidating the indebtedness incurred in connection with the retirement of the Wilson-Snyder Manufacturing Corporation debentures, but they are also desirous of retiring in whole or in part the preferred stock when in their judgment the market price of the common stock of United States Steel Corporation will justify its sale for these purposes.

No plans can be definitely formulated for the future until its liability under the guarantees given to the United States Steel Corporation is definitely determined.

IT IS TO BE REMEMBERED THAT ERNIE, MRS NEBBS BROTHER MARRIED HOPE KLOTZMEYER, A MILLIONAIRESS, AND NOW SHE'S SEEKING A DIVORCE ON GROUNDS THAT HE WON'T WORK.
TO MAKE MATTERS WORSE, HERE'S A LETTER FROM MY ATTORNEY TELLING ME I BETTER GET A JOB— THE MORE MENIAL THE BETTER JUST TO SHOW I AM WILLING TO WORK
HE SAYS MY WIFE, HOPE, HAS ENTERED A DECREE FOR DIVORCE AND HER CONTENTION IS THAT I WON'T WORK - THERE'S A SELFISH WOMAN - HAS A COUPLE MILLION BUCKS AND WANTS ME TO WORK TO GET MORE
WELL, I SUPPOSE I'LL HAVE TO TAKE THE ELEVATOR JOB - MY WIFE COULD LET ME MANAGE HER AFFAIRS, BUT NO! AND HERE'S MY BROTHER-IN-LAW WHO'S GOT ALL KINDS OF JOBS, BUT WOULD HE GIVE ME AN EASY ONE - NO! IF I WASN'T A STRONG-MINDED PERSON, I'D PASS OUT IN SYMPATHY WITH MYSELF

Delight Told That Travers Still Loves Mary Lou

CHAPTER XLV.

He rose and looked down on her.

"Anything," he told her, conscious of a sense of relief, of reprieve, for which he hated himself.

"Then get hold of that press agent lad. I want to talk to him."

"Larry Mitchell? Of course. It won't be hard. He's probably at the Wynnes' now."

"Wynnes'?"

"Neighbors of ours. Mitchell is engaged to the daughter."

"Oh, yes, I remember. A young man in love. He was the perfect picture of that touching state. Well, get him for me if you can; I want to ask him something."

After Lorrimer had left the room she lay back against the pillows and tried to think her way out. There was no doubt that she was tempted. Terribly tempted. She admitted as much to herself. Why hadn't Mary Lou stayed and fought it out with her? Why had she run away? "But," thought Delight, "in this case running away took more courage. All she had to do was to stay and say nothing and let him look at both of us." She smiled, very bitterly, having no illusions. "But now that she has run away," said Delight to herself, "she's left me a clear field. Well, comparatively clear; I'd be a fool not to take advantage of it. But then, I've always been a fool."

Travers Calls Larry

Before dinner Larry Mitchell arrived. He arrived in a condition which strongly resembled excitement, for Jenny, meeting him at the station that afternoon, had, of course, told him the whole story of her encounter with Mary Lou.

"She said she'd keep in touch with us. But she won't. Where has she gone?" Jenny demanded frantically. "What will she do? Larry, we must find her; she's breaking her heart over Travers and this idiotic woman, whoever she is. And it's all your fault! To think that I have promised to marry such an unmitigated imbecile!" cried Jenny, very much upset.

"Check!" agreed Larry, as disturbed as she. "But how could I know that Mary Lou, darn her, would spill the complicated beans? I tell you, Jenny, I was blamed near keeping the whole business to myself, but I couldn't. You see the situation had to be cleared up sooner or later. Mary Lou couldn't go on pretending to the end of time. She couldn't keep stalling Lorrimer until all of us were gray and you and I had our playful grandchildren around our rheumatic knees—"

"You take a lot for granted!" sniffed Jenny. But she smiled.

"Sure I do. That's the only way to get along in this life," quoth the unabashed Larry. "But don't worry, honey. I'll take a jaunt out to Oakdale. She'll go there, I'm sure. I'll take her and shake her—"

"And bring her back to me!" ordered Jenny. "She needn't go to Westwood House. She can see Aunt Margaret here. She needn't lay eyes on Travers—but I can't endure to think of her eating her heart out somewhere, thinking he hates her—Oh, she told me he'd hate her! Larry, can't you choke this Delight person or give her an ounce of arsenic? Because it's Mary Lou whom Travers really loves. And she loves him. This other woman doesn't count," said Jenny magnificently.

"Well, who said she did?" asked Larry.

Lorrimer got him by 'phone.

"I thought you'd be there. Can you come over?" he wanted to know. "Jenny, too, if she will—it's rather important."

While Larry was answering, Jenny danced frantically around him, hissing, "Remember, you're not supposed to know anything about recent developments"; at which Larry found himself smirking into the 'phone, his face wreathed in false smiles and his voice tinged with jollity as if Lorrimer could see him.

So a little later, they rode over to Westwood and, while Mrs. Lorrimer talked to Jenny in the library and explained to her, very carefully, the whole situation as it now stood, Jenny listening and interpolating the necessary exclamations and murmurs, Larry and Lorrimer were walking together, in the boxwood garden, where Lorrimer told him briefly what had happened.

Sees Delight

"No need to go into details. You know about everything. In a sense you're responsible," Lorrimer said, trying to smile, "for it was you who gave Mary Lou the advertisement, which I can only designate as 'fatal'—"

"And," Lorrimer went on, "it was you who found Delight. She wants to talk to you. I don't know what about. I've asked Mother to tell Jenny the story—you don't want to keep any secrets from your wife, do you?" he asked. "And moreover she'd have to know soon."

"I'll see Miss Hartford," Larry promised. "Lord, what a muddle! And, as you say, most of it my fault."

"I'm not blaming you. I'm thanking you," Lorrimer assured him, "for if it hadn't been for the advertisement—and you—and . . . Mary Lou, I'd be right where I was, last autumn, which was in considerable outer darkness. You know, Mitchell, I don't have to tell you."

"You're not sore at Mary Lou?" asked Larry, directly, but a little more hesitantly than was usual to him.

"No."

Larry looked at Lorrimer's face, closed against him like a fist, not hostile but a little menacing in its complete lack of revelation, its hard reticence.

"Well," suggested Larry, with an assumed lightness, "suppose I go see Miss Harford? Didn't you say she'd left the revue? Perhaps she wants me to square her with the powers that be."

Ten minutes later he was in Delight's room, standing at the foot of her bed, hands in his pockets, red hair ruffled and with a disarming smile upon his young, attractive countenance.

"Well, young man," commented Delight, "you seem to be able to take a lot of time off!"

Asks About Mary Lou

"I'm a free lance writer," said Larry proudly, "that is, except for the swell signed articles I do for the popers now and then. As for the publicity agent part of it, I grieve to say that my job is over. I didn't show up at the first night, you see, and the management was hurt."

"You have certainly done a lot of damage around here," said Delight reflectively. "What did you mean by telling my right name? I assure you my right name is one of the few things I don't, as a rule, tell anybody. When I entrusted it to you, how was I to know it would mean anything to you or to anyone else?" she said.

"I didn't know what to do," he told her, frankly. "I knew at once who you were—I mean, when you told me."

"Don't be comic. You know what I mean. I won't be polite with you now. I liked you all right, but how did I know what sort of a—"

"Spare me that," interrupted Delight, a little harshly.

"Oh, Lord, I always put my foot in it!" Larry groaned dismally, and regarded his number tens with animosity. "But I didn't, and that's flat, and so, knowing the situation out here, I thought the best thing I could do was toddle out and tell Mary Lou and Mrs. Lorrimer and let them work it out for themselves. Well, Mary Lou did."

"I want to know something. You've certainly been frank. Well, be franker still, frank and earnest—two such nice boys, only one doesn't meet them often socially," said Delight. "That kid—Mary You—you've known her longer than the rest of them here. She's in love with Lorry, isn't she? Go on, tell me, forget you're a gentleman. I must know, for certain."

"Yes," answered Larry. He flushed scarlet. "It's letting her down to tell you," he said uncomfortably.

Still Loves Her

"No, it's not," she denied, sharply. "Do you know that for a fact or is it just guess work? Man's superior intuition and all that."

"She told me so," Larry said, simply.

Larry shrugged.

"Of course. That is, he loved her, thinking she was you."

"I've heard that often enough. Don't go into details. It makes my head ache. What I want to know is this: You know Mary Lou very well. You know Lorry, to some extent. Tell me: if I were out of the picture, do you think he'd continue to love her, knowing who she was?" demanded Delight.

"This," thought Larry, a little bewildered, but sure of one thing, "this is a darned fine woman, somehow."

"Yes," he replied, "I do. I've nothing to go on except this: If he sees her again, if he realizes that—that she was herself all along, that the part she played was really, in a way, minor, he'll know. He'll know that it was she he—"

"That's enough. Can one shout in this mansion? If so, call Lorry, ask him to come up here."

"What are you going to do?" demanded Larry, but starting obediently for the door.

"I'm going to upset the apple cart."

"Well, you've an established precedent in Eve," wisecracked Larry mechanically. He went to the door, out to the gallery and leaned over. "Oh, Lorrimer," he shouted, "will you come up here a moment?"

Back in the bedroom he stared at her. She smiled back at him.

"I feel like the chap in Dickens' what's-its-name—'It's a far, far better thing I do,'" she quoted with mock gravity, "'than I have ever done.'"

But her eyes were not mocking.

DAILY TRUE STORY

Mr. Meeker

Gentle Husband Vanquishes Domineering Wife

"We are grateful for this contribution, Mr. Meeker. It will be a great help to our Civic Improvement League. Your name will head the list—"

"No, it won't—put it down as from a 'Friend,'" Mr. Meeker said.

Mrs. Meeker was just entering the library and overheard this.

"Not at all, not at all—let your light shine, is my motto," Mrs. Meeker boomed. "Put the donation down as from Anna Parkman Meeker."

"But—er—Mr. Meeker is making the donation, Mrs. Meeker, and—uh—er—"

"Put it down—and I do not want any misunderstanding—put it down as from Anna Parkman Meeker," Mrs. Meeker boomed again.

The representative of the Civic Inprovement League became greatly embarrassed.

"This is Mrs. Meeker, put it down to whatever she says—and excuse me—I have some other matters to look after," Meeker said, with a gesture of resignation.

When he got home he was tired. But he knew that he had to dress for dinner, although they were to dine alone. Rodney, their son, was at Palm Beach, as one might observe by the Sunday rotogravure sections of the papers.

Argues With Wife

"You embarrassed me, Archibald, before that man from the league," she said, by way of greeting, when he came down.

"Quite an undertaking," he murmured.

"You are still impossible. Without me to guide you, in everything, I wonder where you would be?"

Mr. Meeker wanted to say that he would be at peace in any event, but he was diplomatic, almost always.

"Without me to pass final judgment, Archibald, you would be lost. I do wish you would appreciate it and not cross me in everything. Hasn't my judgment been always of the best?"

"Better than mine in some things," he answered.

She almost smiled, because of this. But she restrained herself and nodded sagely.

Mr. Meeker was thinking of the matter of judgment in selecting a life mate, but he didn't diagram his thoughts.

"Naturally you admit it—my judgment is superior in everything, as I have tried to tell you so often—why do you—"

"What about the Uxel Stocks and the G. H. T. investment and the Yolanda development, Anna? You sunk a little more than half a million in those things when I told you to lay off, and—"

"Archibald Meeker! How dare you bring those things up? It was just a crazy market that did it. I was virtually right."

Dislikes Social Set

"But virtually right didn't bring back the half-million you lost. I realize my feeble judgment in all things, and yet I have managed to get together some fifty or more millions."

Poor little Mr. Meeker. He had done well by Anna and she used to be a mighty fine sort of wife; but his prosperity went to her head. His millions caused her to be toadied by her smart set until she came to believe that she was the brains and genius and the head of the Meeker family and fortunes.

And half of her so-called friends were leeches, begging for this and for that crazy enterprise, or society, or movement.

He wished he could squirm out of coming home the next day to address his wife's little society on matters of finance. He knew all about them. He knew that half a dozen of them were the sharp-witted wives of certain brokers and others in the street. They had organized their little society and had made Mrs. Meeker president.

Their claim was that the advanced woman must be reckoned with as a coming power in the market. Meeker had tried to explain what was behind it to his wife and she called him a silly fool.

"They want to get market tips from you. They think you will get them from me. They'll gallop home and tell their husbands. You're just a cat's-paw, Anna," he said to her.

"I will thank you not to consider your wife a fool, Archibald. And don't show petty jealousy because my prominence and social position and keen intellect are appreciated."

He had promised to be home at 4 the next afternoon. It was 10 minutes of 4 when he arrived. His wife came out of the reception room as he came in.

"Wait 10 minutes, Archibald. I said you were to have the privilege of addressing us at 4 and—"

"Rodney's sick—just got a wire—I'm taking the 5 o'clock—no, I guess I'll fly down," he said.

At 4 sharp Mr. Meeker entered the big room and bowed gravely to the 20 women assembled there.

He spoke clearly and slowly.

"Women," he said, "are naturally keen in everything. A few hints from me will enable you to understand market conditions. If you happen to have Dixon-Kling, sell immediately, get out from under. As for good buys, devote your energies and your spare cash to Uplands X, to J. O. G. and to Alate Consolidated."

He talked a little more, clever taffy to please his wife. Then he excused himself.

An hour later he was on the flying field.

Mrs. Meeker by this time had talked with her son by long distance—as soon as her delighted club members had gone.

"Not very sick, mother—guess the doctor got frightened. I'll be out again tomorrow—indigestion I think," he assured her.

"I'm so glad. I didn't believe it was anything, Rodney, you are so healthy. Your silly father is on his way down now. I believe he is flying down."

"Oh, well, a little sun and surf bathing will do him good—he overworks you know, mother."

Meets Daughter-in-Law

"Cheerio, mother."

Rodney knew better than to argue.

Mr. Meeker did fly down. Not because he was in the least worried, but because he discovered that it did him good.

"Let me in on it, Dad?" was his greeting.

"Just a little test—I want to see how it will work out. I had a hunch your mother wouldn't be alarmed over the wire. I had you send me saying you were sick, and I had a hunch that she would insist on my addressing her club of women who are after market tips for their husbands."

"But I don't understand, dad—"

"Honey," he said to her, "meet your ferocious daddy-in-law!"

He was down there two weeks, but he stuck pretty close to a private wire through to his office, and he seemed to be getting a lot of amusement out of it.

Before he went back he said to his son and the pretty little bride, "You can't keep this marriage a secret much longer. Take a trip to Europe and I'll have a nice home for you when you get back, by that time your mother may be reconciled, if she lives through what's coming to her in a couple of days."

She telephoned him and told him to rush back at once. He knew all about what was up.

The Worm Turns

She took him in and made him face her club members. The sorest bunch of women a person ever saw.

"Explain, Archibald Meeker, what you meant by giving us such utterly misleading market advice—we all lost money—the stuff you told us to sell went up 40 points in a week. The stuff you told us to buy has dropped from 30 to 60—now explain and help us all to reimburse—"

"My object," Meeker said coldly, "was to convince my wife that you are a gang of leeches and tricksters—that your men folks put you up to forming this so-called club to make a sucker of Mrs. Meeker and get market information from me. I wouldn't give my grandmother any market tips. You women ran home on the gallop and told your husbands what I had said, and you all lost money—but there is a way out—don't look to me—my name is Meeker, I'm just the husband of Anna Parkman Meeker. Mrs. Meeker, whose judgment is superior to all others, will tell you just what to do—she sits on the right hand of Jehovah. I sometimes think, and gives advice—you must excuse me now, I have to catch a boat to Europe to meet my son and his bride!"

Mr. Meeker was gone a year. Mrs. Meeker finally went abroad and meekly begged him to come home.

She even approved of Rodney's wife, because he told her that one crack at the girl, or about the girl, and he'd tell them about her society and how she used her judgment.

Mr. Meeker is boss now.

The Rooney Bill

Civic Organizations to Give Final Blow to Unpopular Measure.

With civic and school welfare organizations planning to descend on Harrisburg in a body, the Rooney bill will be permanently buried. The sponsor of the measure has disowned it and Mayor Kline has publicly expressed his opposition, so that there seems to be little chance to revive the issue. The last rites will be said at the hearing tomorrow.

Organized opposition to the Rooney bill, which would substitute a salaried elective school board for the present unsalaried appointed one, cannot be too strong. The obvious purpose of the measure was to take our school system out of the capable hands of the present administration and to put it under political control.

The disclosures made recently about the workings of the Departments of Supplies and Public Works are sufficient comment on the dangers of putting the schools under similar influences.

The present Board of Education, working without salary, has efficiently managed over $100,000,000 worth of property. It has raised standards throughout the educational system and has steered the schools clear of political influence. Pittsburgh cannot afford to jeopardize its rising generation by opening the door for a lowering of standards in the operation of schools.

Lang Wants All Bared

Attitude of Director in Works Inquiry Evidence of No Shielding.

One thing comforting to the public that stands out prominently in the councilmanic inquiry into the affairs of the Department of Public Works is the attitude of Director Edward G. Lang. In the face of certain obstructionist methods that appear now and then in the inquiry, the willingness of Director Lang to have everything connected with his department bared to public gaze is most reassuring. His request for information from anyone who knows of crookedness in his department does him real credit. Judging from what is passing in the inquiry, the stand of Director Lang is that, no matter what develops, he has nothing to fear except the possibility that some of the subordinates, for whom, of course, in the final analysis, he is responsible, may prove to have been unworthy of his confidence.

His declaration that he, himself, will aid in the prosecution of any employe of his department who may prove to have been unfaithful in his duties, is commendable—and different.

Light Company Value

Phillips Explains Apparent Conflict of Separate Sets Of Figures.

Frank R. Phillips, president of the Duquesne Light Company, has given an explanation of the apparently conflicting valuations placed on the company. During the course of hearings before the House committee investigating the Public Service Commission and the public utilities it was testified that the light company is valued at $49,000,000 for tax purposes and at $149,000,000 in statements filed with the commission.

Mr. Phillips declares that both sets of figures were compiled in accordance with the letter and the spirit of the law and that neither is intended as representative of the real values of the company's properties.

The $49,000,000 valuation is for the state capital stock tax. It represents an appraisal of the values of common and preferred stocks of the company, but does not take bonds or any other factors into consideration.

The $149,000,000 valuation was prepared in accordance with the commission's rules and represents invested capital. It does not take into consideration the large amounts of surplus earnings reinvested in the company each year, according to Mr. Phillips.

This does not alter the fact that the Public Service Commission has taken entirely too passive an attitude towards the utilities. It has made no effort to assure itself whether or not the charges made by companies serving the public have been reasonable.

Flood Control Benefits

Aid to Mississippi Navigation Suggests Possibilities For Local Rivers.

High river stages, caused by recent heavy general precipitation over the Monongahela and Monongahela watersheds, again calls to mind the importance of flood control. Not only as a preventive of flood damage but as an aid to river navigation.

That it is an aid is proven by the experience of the Inland Waterways Corporation, operating the Federal Barge Lines on the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers. Formerly there was an annual deficit up to $1,000,000, but there has been a substantial profit since 1924, when river improvements began to show their practical benefit.

The flood control work on Mississippi tributaries being carried on by Army engineers under the flood control bill of 1928 will have further beneficial effect on future development of the corporation, which recently contracted for 40 modern steel barges, to cost $2,546,800.

This is an impressive record. Flood control work on the Allegheny, a proposal of many years' standing, could be expected to convey corresponding benefits to navigation of the Ohio besides extending the navigable portion of the Allegheny to a greater distance.

Open Forum Needed

Pittsburgh Should Have Place Where All Things Could Be Discussed on Basis of Freedom of Speech.

A number of American cities, including New York, Cleveland and Detroit, have established open forums, where all are permitted to express their views. There is need of such an institution here. The constitutional right of free speech here has been denied by officious public servants with sufficient frequency as to cause vehement protest, not only by those denied their right, but by citizens of high standing, who see a threat against our cherished institutions in such unwarranted interference.

Truth cannot be killed. Discussion of problems is a rational and proper way of ascertaining the truth. Free speech is a bulwark against tyranny and oppression and it should not be throttled. Of course, it is unreasonable to assume that we should permit the vaporings of some zealot in behalf of his "cause," to interfere with our own liberties. But we should provide all a place where they could have their say on matters in which they are interested, in the presence of all who wish to hear their opinions.

'A King's Ransom' -:- -:- By Nelson Harding

Of power and efficiency
Pay ransom to the petty chiefs
Of violence and banditry?

How long does he intend to pay
These ever growing sums, through fear?
How long before he'll use his strength?
To crush the thug and racketeer?

OUR HEAVENLY NEIGHBOR

By Archibald Henderson

Einstein has driven home to the modern mind a conviction of the difficulties of arriving at absolute values on determining things absolutely. Some people, notably Mr. Voliva, do not believe that the earth is spherical or pseudo-spherical. Some people gravely doubt the accepted scale of the universe, considering it vastly too large. It is really a noteworthy fact that, whereas we know the relative positions and orbits of the heavenly bodies with reference to each other, we do not yet know the absolute; that is, the exact distances separating them.

Until very recent years we did not know the so-called astronomical unit to within 100,000 miles. Today it is believed that this uncertainty is reduced to one-tenth of its former dimension, so that we know the distance from the earth to the sun to within 10,000 miles. The accepted value is 92,870,00 miles; but this means the distance might be nearer 92,860,000 miles or 92,880,000 miles.

A particular interest attaches to the visit which Eros, fascinating little asteroid, has been paying us this winter. More than a thousand of these tiny little planets have been discovered. Their diameters range in size from the width of Arizona to that of Central Park, New York City. Roughly speaking, the diameter of Eros is slightly less than the length of Manhattan Island; but this figure is not exact enough to satisfy us. Consequently the astronomers have been "taking shots" at Eros for several months past, the open season on Eros lasting from December until March.

Imagine Eros moving in a very elongated orbit, the sun being placed away off to one side of the center of the orbit. Eros moves, for a considerable part of its path, inside the orbit of Mars. At its greatest distance it is roughly 250,00,000 miles distant from the earth; at its closest position, only about 14,000,000 miles off.

As the earth revolves around its almost circular orbit in 12 months, Eros moves in its elliptical orbit one year and nine months. Once during every turn Eros reaches again the point in its orbit which is only 14,000,000 miles away from a point in the earth's orbit. Unfortunately, their schedules are not conveniently synchronized; so that when Eros is in the favorable position, the earth is likely not. About every half century the earth and Eros are both in the desired positions at the same time—namely at a distance apart of about 14,000,000 miles.

It is no easy matter to determine the diameter of Eros, even in the most favorable position. Photographs have to be taken every one-fifth of a second. The diameter of Eros subtends a tiny arc—only one-eighth of a second. It presents a disc no larger than a dime seen at distance of 15 miles. From the observations, made with infinite care, astronomers expect to learn a very nearly accurate scale for absolute distance.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

It was a letter from a young wife about husbands. Her husband in particular. She said that American mothers train their boys to be good sons—

BUT THEY DO NOT TRAIN THEIR BOYS TO BE HUSBANDS.

Dear Miss Robinson:

What's this big idea about "boys being raised to be husbands?" Isn't a man doing enough when he brings home the bacon as a doctor, lawyer, hod-carrier or what not, without also expecting him to do the household chores as well? Yet that is exactly what is expected of the average husband. Here's what the usual American does before he goes to his office—

Get up at 6:30. Put on the coffee to percolate. Shave while doing so. Rush down the street for rolls and morning paper. Race upstairs again. Set the table. Heat the baby's milk. Pick up yesterday's discarded socks, underwear or what-have-you and put them neatly into the laundry bag. Pay the ice man. Fry the eggs and prepare the toast. Then awaken the Beloved Wife with a cheery kiss. Assist her into the breakfast room. Tie the bib around the baby's neck and stuff the oatmeal down his protesting throat while "mamma" reads the paper. Clear the table. Put the dishes in the sink. Then, at last, throw on your coat and hat, remembering to be a dutiful husband and kiss the wife "bye-bye" with an affectionate hug, promising to be home at 6 and phone during the lunch hour. Baloney!

That's the truth. And yet you have the nerve to add—Sister has been instructed in the duties of wife and mother. Where? Not in this town! I'll give you the dope on this "sister" business.

At 14 she graduates from grammar school. At 14, she hasn't learned anything about domestics except to listen to papa and mamma fight, pester everyone in the house for movie money, stick her tongue out at brother, spy on big sister and her boy friend, and otherwise make a general nuisance of herself.

Then she goes to high school or business school where she continues to learn nothing. Gets mooney about John Gilbert or the boy next door. As for housework—she screams, "I've gotta do my homework," or else hides, if anyone suggests that she run to the store or dust the living room. At 16, she begins going to parties with Big Sister—and from that moment she's out gunning for a husband.

And then, some morning some young sap wakes up and finds himself married to "a wife"—a wife who can't even sew on a button, much less cook a meal or run a house. Then, if he dares to complain because the house is upset, or she has run him head over heels into debt, she bursts into tears, runs home to mamma, and the whole family lands on his neck for his "brutality." Result: divorce.

Or suppose he endures it. Then what happens to him? She sleeps until eleven—spends the rest of her morning phoning her girl friends—spends her afternoon going to movies, beauty shops, window gadding, hotel lolling. At 6 p. m., the young husband, after being on the fighting line all day, arrives home, exhausted, to eat a delicatessen supper and meet a fresh, charming vivacious wife who is all ready for a large evening's entertainment. If he's too fagged to take her — more tears, reproaches. "She might as well be dead as live like this."

Maybe you won't dare to print this. But it's the truth, and you know it.

H. Christian Berthelsen.

Is it? I wonder. ARE LADIES REALLY LIKE THIS? What's YOUR answer to H. Christian?

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS.

Your Way

Never mind the worry,
Never mind the care,
Never mind how thickly shadows stray;
There still must be some trouble
To every being's share,
But things will soon be coming out your way!

Though you may have often
Been misunderstood
You will never stumble if you choose
Pathways always honest,
Always kind and good,
There isn't any chance for you to lose!

Some men ask for honors,
Others seek for fame,
There are those who want life glad and gay;
But the best of dowers
In this living game
Is knowing things are coming out your way!

Marry-Go-Round

By HELEN ROWLAND.

Woman's Sinecure

* * *

As he eats his dinner in the breakfast nook or his breakfast off the ironing-board, while the dining room floor varnish is drying, he wonders if there is really so much in love, after all.

Or he gets up in the night, stumbles over a forgotten mop or a bundle of rugs from the cleaners, and decides, emphatically, that cleanliness is not even a second-cousin to godliness. Why, in the name of liberty and Al Capone, should spring cleaning be a national rite, anyhow?

* * *

Lives there a man with soul so dead, who never to his wife hath said, "What this house needs is SYSTEM—that's all! Why d'ya make such a hard job of it?"

* * *

YOU know how it is. All you have to do is to get the house "organized"—and then give orders. After that you can sit down at the piano and merrily tinkle out Mendelssohn's Spring Song, while the work goes on.

* * *

Whoopee! Beds fall apart, like a row of chorines, after the first act, do a few high kicks and dust themselves off. Blankets shimmy themselves out of the window and cozily cuddle up into the cedar chest for the winter.

* * *

Dishes hop off the cupboard shelves and go gleefully into a huddle, while you put the new oilcloth up, and "blow" a year's dirt off the walls.

* * *

The clock washes its own face and hands, the forks shine the knives and the piano polishes its own legs.

* * *

The cook and the charwoman laughingly struggle for the fun of running the vacuum cleaner. The painters psychoanalyze you and always get things just the exact shade you had in mind. The plumbers and storage men are always just on the dot.

* * *

Nothing ever goes wrong, nobody ever fails to show up, nothing is ever broken, life is one long sweet roundelay, and the moon is made of caramel custard.

* * *

New Colossal Statue of the Saviour

It Will Be Erected to Commemorate the Treaty Between the Vatican and Mussolini.

THE "SACRED HEART" TO BE ERECTED NEAR MILAN.

On Mount Calvario, a beautiful site formed by two branches of Rhaetian Alps, 65 miles from Milan, this gigantic statue will be unveiled next month.

It is at present being transported from Milan, where it was made by the Italian sculptor, Signor Timo Bortolotti. Moving the statue is a difficult task because of the statue's great weight and size.

Those looking up the Camonica Valley will see it in the distance, giving the appearance of a giant cross, because of the outstretched arms.

The unveling will be attended by the King of Italy, many great dignitaries from the Vatican representing the Pope, and perhaps by Mussolini himself.

Very important in the history of Italy and that of the Catholic Church is the event that erection of this statue is intended to celebrate, the signing of the Lateran Treaty between the Vatican and the Government of Italy two years ago, bringing into harmony the Italian State and Church and ending the long voluntary imprisonment of the Popes within the limits of the Vatican.

The great size of the statue is made desirable, as it is planned for visibility at a great distance from the height on which it stands. Big crowds will attend the unveiling.

Mere size in itself powerfully affects the human imagination. For that reason the gigantic "Colossus of Rhodes," a statue of bronze alleged by fiction of the Middle Ages to be so big that ships could sail between its outstretched feet, one standing on either side of the harbor, has already been included among the Seven Wonders of the World.

That Collossus, representing the Sun God, was 105 feet high.

An earthquake destroyed it more than 2,100 years ago, and it lay a mass of broken bronze for 800 years after the earthquake.

Then a Jewish dealer in old metal bought it and carted it away on 900 camels, which, perhaps, disillusioned the alleged "Sun God" worshipers, if any were left.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, April 6.—Diary of a modern Pepys: Lay late and came the Courtney Ryley Coopers, back from Florida, and we talked about Care Brandt, Bob Davis, Karl Harriman and the astonishingly grisly vice exposures in the city. And I served some tasty marinated herring sent by S. Ernest in Detroit.

So to say farewell to R. M. Brinkerhoff against his sea voyage around the globe, the lucky fellow, and on to Lucy Virginia Long's and she distraught over house robbers carrying away her sables, chinchila and wrist watch, only partly insured.

In the evening to see Gene Crawley's new home, the living room suggesting the Grand Central rotunda and to the theater, driving Lisle Bell and his wife home. Thence afoot to my quarters and somehow befogged by the greatest depression I have ever known.

* * *

Ziegfeld has apparently abandoned his seasonal outburst of splendor known as the Follies. Glorified movie houses presenting beautiful scenes melting into dazzling ladies have so plagiarized Ziggie's revue idea that he is hatching something entirely new.

* * *

In tenement districts a stranger expects to run across leering gutter gamins who make faces, hurl stones and scuttle into dark hallways. Once that was true. But not any more. Some of the most polite children will be found in such areas—better mannered indeed than those Tollos chaperoned by imported governesses in the Central Park Mall.

* * *

From a slum shaver in a brooding hallway Ted Cook and I recently asked a direction. He told us, bowed politely but bestowed a deserving rebuke when I offered a small coin for his trifling service. "Thank you," he said, "but I do not accept money from strangers."

* * *

A hiccuping drunk stumbled into the foyer of Roxy's the other morning as the caparisoned and caped ushers were assembling to fall in line for the day. The stew clapped his hands together several times and mumbled: "Go ahead boys and march!" And after a moment to no one in particular muttered: "I just dearly love drilling."

The disaster to the World is history. Many old employes were absorbed in the merger but a number found themselves jobless in a period of general economic distress. I talked to at least a half dozen who were jobless themselves but they were more concerned with landing something for the old timers. Newspapermen like to give the impression of being hard-boiled—the outward show of fussiness and a sort of Shavian contentiousness. Yet it is mostly bluff. Crack the superficial veneer and they're as soft as putty. Take them to a tear-jerking play and will they blubber!

The most perfectly groomed man I have seen for quite a spell is Clive Brooks, English actor. He seemed casually dressed but maybe he was going places. I didn't inquire.
